Pittman, Borah Clash on Embargo; Nazis Warn U. S. Ships; Americas Curb U-Boats

Keep Course and Refuse Convoy In Allied Seas, Vessels Are Told

By John G. Norris.

Germany has warned American merchant ships, it became known yesterday, that in passing through waters around France and England, they should not zigzag, screen their lights, accept British or French naval convoys, or fail to obey a command of German naval forces to stop.

As a "special warning" to American shipping interests, the German notice was published by this Government yesterday.

Manifests Made Secret

At the same time, it was announced that the Treasury for the first time since the World War has forbidden publication of shipping manifests in order that such Government information may not be used by belligerent warcraft in determining what ships might be carrying contraband.

A few hours later, Secretary of State Hull called on American citizens to stay off vessels of all the belligerent powers. While pointing out that under international law Americans have a right to travel on such ships and that even the American neutrality law permits them to return home from abroad on belligerent nations' craft for 90 days after the outbreak of war, the Secretary said, "I regard such travel as dangerous considering the character of the warfare that is now in progress."

Text of German Notice

Germany's notice to United States shipping, transmitted by the Maritime Commission to the Navy Department's Hydrographic Office, said:

"Neutral merchant ships have repeatedly attempted in the waters around France and England to evade the exercise of the right of German naval forces, granted by international law, of stoppage and search. Besides, they have repeatedly aroused suspicion of attack or unneutral acts, by improper behavior.

"The government of the Reich therefore begs to call the attention of American merchant vessels traveling into the waters mentioned to the fact that, in their own interest, and in order to prevent confusion with naval or auxiliary ships of the enemy, especially at night, they should avoid any suspicious behavior, particularly change of course and use of the radio apparatus upon sighting German naval forces, zigzagging, screening lights, failing to obey a demand to stop, and the acceptance of convoy by naval forces of the powers at war with Germany."

U. S. Withholds Comment

The communication was published by the Hydrographic Office without comment and officials in other departments of the Government declined to discuss it.

It was pointed out, however, that this Government, while not abandoning any of its rights under international law, has taken the stand that during the war it might be advisable for American vessels to follow a course similar to that suggested by Germany.

At the time this Government abandoned the idea of United States naval craft convoying home American liners bearing American citizens caught in Europe by outbreak of the war, officials expressed fear any naval convoy for a merchant vessel might arouse the suspicion of a belligerent warship and result in an attack.

Right of Search Conceded

Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison said is had been decided that American ships probably would be safer if they proceeded without convoy, on a regular course, without zigzagging, with lights on full at night, and without secrecy as to course or sailing hours. At the same time, other officials said that belligerents undoubtedly had the right to stop and search merchant ships for contraband, and to sink such vessels as refused to stop.

Stalin Confers For 2 Hours With Latvian

Reception Is Cool; Lithuanian, Finnish Envoys May Be Next

By Witt Hancock,
United Press Staff Writer.

Moscow, Oct. 2.—Joseph Stalin and other Soviet officials held a two-hour conference tonight with Foreign Minister William Munters of Latvia as Russia intensified her diplomatic moves in the Baltic, the Black Sea and the Balkans.

Diplomatic observers agreed the conference was a likely attempt to strengthen Soviet control of the north Baltic and the Gulf of Finland gained through a treaty last Friday with Estonia.

No announcement was made of the purpose, however, and official interpretation likewise still was lacking of negotiations that are proceeding with Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu, who is in Moscow.

Lithuanian to Be Next

Foreign Minister Juozas Urbsys, of Lithuania, will follow the ministers of Estonia and Latvia to Moscow. Urbsys is expected to depart from Kaunas tomorrow by plane on invitation of the Soviet government.

It was said Urbsys and Molotoff would discuss matters of mutual interest, and observers said they believed the question of Vilna (Wilno) would be settled.

Vilna, former capital of Lithuania, was seized by Poland in 1920. The city was given to Russia in the German-Russian partition of Poland last Friday.

Foreign diplomatic circles here speculated, meanwhile, on the possibility that Finland "would be next" in the Soviet drive to strengthen her naval and military position on the Baltic.

Participating in tonight's conversations were Stalin, Molotoff, Vladimir Potemkin, vice commissar for foreign affairs; Munters and M.

Panama Parley Votes Neutrality And Safety Zone Around Americas

By the Associated Press

Panama City, Oct. 2.—A full plenary meeting of delegates of the 21 American Republics tonight approved the declaration of Panama proclaiming a broad safety zone in American waters for inter-American shipping and a general declaration of neutrality in the European war.

Rushing to completion the entire neutrality program for protection of American interests, the delegates asserted the declaration was a "complement to the Monroe Doctrine" and established for the first time a "continental American seas."

The declaration said each American government, by common consent, will serve notice on belligerents in Europe's war of a fixed neutral zone within which belligerent activities will be regarded as a danger to American peace.

[Other dispatches from Panama City said the declaration creates a wide "neutral" belt, in some places 600 miles wide, around the New World and all land, sea and air forces of the warring nations, including submarines, will be barred from engaging in belligerent acts inside the belt. Passenger and freight ships, regardless of their neutrality, will be immune from attack while en route between American ports.—Editor's note.]

Economic Program Planned

A corollary doctrine included in the general neutrality declaration fixes uniform standards, rights and obligations of neutrals with belligerents.

The measures are to be reinforced by a general economic program to be formulated by a permanent advisory committee in Washington.

Upon the motion of United States Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles, the conference tonight unanimously requested President Juan Demostenes Arosemena, of Panama, to communicate the declaration of Panama to all the belligerent nations in Europe.

The session approved a continental solidarity declaration in which the American nations:

Reaffirmed "the declaration of solidarity among the peoples of this hemisphere proclaimed at the Lima conference in 1938."

Pledged themselves to conserve and strengthen peace and harmony among the American republics.

"Formulated fervent hopes for cessation of the deplorable state of war" in Europe and for "a new reign in the world of peace, not of violence but of justice and right."

The declaration of "general neutrality" gave each country the right to decide its own way of making it effective. It said the nations will make their "rights and positions as neutrals fully respected and observed by all belligerents."

No Bases for Belligerents

It provides that the American nations:

Shall not permit their respective territories, land, sea or air, to be used as a base for belligerent activities.

Shall not permit inhabitants of their territories to affect the neutral position of the American

'Friendly Enemies' . . .

Harris & Ewing

Senator Key Pittman, the President's champion of the new neutrality bill (left), and Senator Borah, who opposed the issue in debate yesterday, temporarily put aside their "battle of words." Because of his position as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Pittman spoke first for the Administration in the debate. (Other Pictures on Page 14.)

Repeal Will Mean War, Idaho Veteran Insists; Nevadan Says Arms Ban Is Unfair to the Allies

(Partial Texts of Pittman and Borah Statements, Page 9.)

By Robert C. Albright

The Senate's top spokesmen on foreign affairs yesterday launched the Senate on epic debate of Administration proposals to lift the arms embargo and impose a rigid "title and carry" law.

Senator Pittman (Democrat), of Nevada, lean, placid chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and president pro tempore of the Senate, offered unimpassioned recital of the bill's contents. He maintained the arms embargo was unneutral and "a discrimination in favor of Germany."

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, dean of the Senate and ranking minority member of the Foreign Relations Committee, charged that loans and "our American boys" were sure to follow any shipment of arms overseas. He said "the war hounds of Europe" seek enactment of the bill.

House Members Line Walls

Galleries packed and guarded, a full Senate contingent and scores of anxiously intent House members lining rear walls of the chamber, heard the momentous presentation of the bill and the historic preface to debate that will echo in the Senate for days to come.

The golden-tongued Borah, speaking with a vigor that recalled his fight against League of Nations entry two decades ago, but with a voice that dropped almost to a whisper as his speech concluded, won the gallery plaudits. He directed his fire chiefly against repeal of the arms embargo.

Less an orator, the matter-of-fact Pittman followed closely his printed text, discussed without drama his conception of the logic of each Administration point, the requirement that American ships be banned from belligerent trade, the proviso that title be transferred before warring Europe can "come and get it," and lastly, embargo repeal. That change, he insisted, "does not affect the European war."

Once they tangled in tense exchange for five minutes, with Pittman maintaining "we cannot have peace if we arouse the enmity of the people of the world by discriminating" and Borah insisting, "Let us not surrender our neutrality because someone else is playing the game in a different way."

The dramatic session opened with a prayer for peace by the Rev. ZeBarney Phillips, chaplain of the Senate, and a silence injunction to the galleries by Vice President Garner, presiding.

An Historic Discussion

Then Majority Leader Barkley briefly took the floor to urge colleagues to hold the discussion "on a high plane befitting the United States Senate." Barkley predicted the debate would go down "as one of the historic discussions of the Senate" and asked co-operation in "prompt and yet deliberate consideration of this measure."

Minority Leader McNary rose to pledge that Republicans, seeking only legitimate debate, will co-operate to keep the discussion on a high level. Preliminaries over, the issue that will determine America's attitude toward the European conflict was joined. The debate that in the next fortnight will lay bare every argument for and against repeal of the existing embargo law was under way.

Pittman's speech, that between delivery and cross-questioning had been expected to consume the entire day, was completed in less than two hours, and by 4 p. m. Senator Borah was through. Progress cheered leaders to predict a vote may be had in another two weeks. At noon today, Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, will resume defense of the Administration bill. Following him, Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, will fling another opposition challenge.

Pittman made his charge that the arms embargo aids Germany in answer to claims that repeal would assist Great Britain and France.

Says Embargo Favors Germany

"We might put it the other way," he said, "and say that the maintenance of such embargo is a discrimination in favor of Germany because it prevents Great Britain, which is surrounded by water, from purchasing in our markets arms, ammunition and implements of war that may be manufactured in Russia, Rumania, Yugoslavia and other countries. . . .

"Italy is a neutral and Russia is a neutral, but we know there is an alliance between Italy and Germany. We know that they have agreed to co-operate. We know that there is an agreement between Russia and Germany through which they are co-operating.

"Isn't it evident that we cannot, through voluntary, artificial laws with reference to imports by belligerent countries, maintain either neutrality or equity?"

Defending the strict American shipping bans imposed by his bill, Pittman asserted "it was the inhuman and illegal killing of our seamen on the high seas" that impelled America's last declaration of war. In support of that view he quoted Senator Borah's own speech in explaining his vote for war on April 4, 1917.

This later was to lead Borah to interpolate a reply into his prepared speech.

"I am no pacifist," roared Idaho's lion.

"If Germany or Great Britain or any other nation attacks this Nation, kills its people, destroys its property, I will be ready again, terrible as I know the consequences will be, to vote for a declaration of war.

"I strove weakly 20 years ago to prevent war. I am seeking now, again weakly, I know, to prevent war. I don't want anything to aggravate the situation that might tend to bring on war. I hope that

Mundelein Dies at Home In Illinois

Posthumous Plea For Peace Delivered For Beloved Cardinal

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chicago, Oct. 2.—George Cardinal Mundelein died today in his sixty-eighth year at Mundelein, Ill., a suburb that changed its name to his as tribute to the greatness of the first cardinal of the West.

The spiritual leader of 1,000,000 Catholics in the Archdiocese of Chicago, Cardinal Mundelein was the friend and confidant of leaders throughout the Nation. One of his closest friends was Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Tonight, Cardinal Mundelein, in a "last message" broadcast for him by the Most Rev. Bernard J. Sheil, auxiliary bishop, made a strong plea for peace in which he urged his countrymen to have faith in the ability of President Roosevelt and Congress to find a solution to the neutrality riddle.

Approved Sunday

Bishop Sheil said the address, read over N. B. C. network, had been "specifically authorized and approved" by Cardinal Mundelein during a conference Sunday.

It appealed for acceptance of the President's leadership and for trust in "his solemnly expressed intentions to protect our youth from war."

"Only in the Vatican," the message said, "is there in Europe the gift of statesman's vision possessed by President Roosevelt."

The "message" was closed with a prayer, that read, in part:

"Let us pray for the victims of war . . . for the repose of the souls of men and boys hurried into eternity."

The closing of the remarkable career of the one-time East Side New York altar boy brought sorrow from the Vatican to the American Pacific Coast.

From Italy came word that Pope Pius XII would celebrate a special mass for the cardinal in his private chapel tomorrow.

Roosevelt Condolences

Cardinal Mundelein succumbed to coronary thrombosis approximately 15 minutes before his body was found at 7:45 a. m. in his bed in his country residence. He was 67 years old last July 2.

His body will lie in state in the Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago from tomorrow night until after the funeral mass at 10:30 a. m. Friday.

More than 100 bishops were to take part in the services and to attend rites of committal at a special crypt behind the altar of the Chapel of St. Mary of the Lake Seminary in Mundelein. William Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, and Dennis Cardinal Dougherty, of Philadelphia, the only surviving U. S. cardinals, have been invited.

News of his death in Washington, where his tremendous efforts in behalf of the Liberty Loan drives and his frequent contacts with high Federal executives almost made

Women Throng In as Embargo Fight Opens Like Greek Drama

Ages Indicate Many Might Be Mothers Whose Sons Would Go if America Gets Into European War

By James D. Secrest.

Scores of women, whose ages indicated they might be mothers of sons ripe for war, occupied the greater portion of a packed Senate gallery yesterday as the historic neutrality debate opened with all the drama of a Greek tragedy.

The crowd, which began to gather before the Capitol doors opened at 9 a. m., contained no top hats, or frock coats, and only a handful of distinguished visitors.

Middle-aged women, some of them Senators' wives, outnumbered men in the galleries, three to one. Many of the men were the younger ones, who would be the first to go if the country went to war.

Advance warnings that admission would be by card only and that seats were limited failed to keep away a throng of spectators which could easily have filled the galleries twice. Optimistically, they stood in line on marble stairways and in Capitol corridors until the Senate adjourned in

U.S. Recognizes Exile Poland

Denounces Conquest; Biddle Calls on New President in Paris

The United States bluntly, if indirectly, told Germany and Russia yesterday that it would not recognize the two powers' conquest and division of Poland, "victim of force used as an instrument of national policy."

Lacking any official notice from the totalitarian nations of their action, which would provide an opportunity for presentation of this Government's reaction in a formal reply, Secretary of State Hull issued a statement saying:

"More than 20 years ago the United States recognized, and has since maintained diplomatic relations with, the Polish government. Poland is now the victim of force used as an instrument of national policy. Its territory has been taken over and its government has had to seek refuge abroad. Mere seizure of territory, however, does not extinguish the legal existence of a government. The United States therefore continues to regard the government of Poland as in existence, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution of Poland, and continues to recognize Count Jerzy Potocki as its Ambassador in Washington. For the present at least Mr. Biddle, United States Ambassador to Poland, will remain near the government to which he has been accredited."

Shortly thereafter, the State Department in effect recognized Vladyslaw Raczkiewicz as the new President of Poland, as it published Ambassador Potocki's notification that Raczkiewicz had taken the oath September 30 in Paris, where the Polish government had taken refuge. At the same time the department published its reply, thanking the ambassador for "your courtesy in conveying this information to the Government of the United States."

Plain intimation was given by Secretary Hull that the United States may be expected to impose on exports of that part of Poland held by Germany the 25 per cent

Green for Arms Ban Repeal

Applause Indicates AFL Will Back Roosevelt Neutrality Program

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 2.—Warning that United States involvement in war would mean labor's regimentation, William Green declared today it is willing to accept and support President Roosevelt's plan for neutrality revision and national security.

His declaration, greeted by applause from the jammed hall where the American Federation of Labor is holding its annual convention, brought forecasts that the delegates would support Green, A. F. L. president, in indorsing the Administration's neutrality program.

Pointing to Mr. Roosevelt's message to Congress, asking for repeal of the arms embargo against belligerents as a step to strengthen this Nation's neutrality, Green said:

"We are willing to accept his word and give him support in his

Nazi, British Submarines Fight Undersea Duel; Germans Win

By Sten Hedman,
By International News Service

Stockholm, Oct. 2.—A battle in which a British submarine was reported sunk by a German U-boat and a machine gun attack by two Swedish army planes on Adolf Hitler's favorite naval yacht, the Grille, were disclosed tonight amid action that flared throughout the western Baltic.

At least 11 neutral ships, including 8 Swedish merchant vessels, were seized by German warships and seaplanes, and forcibly escorted into Reich ports.

In a daring exploit, the Polish navy's patrol ship Batory escaped a cordon of German war vessels and mines off the Hela Peninsula and arrived at Gottland, Sweden, tonight, with 18 officers and men aboard, after outracing German naval ships at a pace of 24 knots across the Baltic. Two other Polish war vessels tried to break the Nazi cordon, but their fate was unknown.

The submarine battle—first engagement of its kind in the present war—was reported this evening by Capt. J. Persson, master of the sunken ship Gun, when he arrived with 188 members of his crew at Helsingborg, Sweden, aboard a Danish rescue vessel.

The British submarine suddenly appeared in the Skagerrak, northwest of Hanstholm, Denmark, and opened fire on the German U-boat in an effort to rescue the freighter Gun, Persson related, saying that at the time he and two members of his crew were prisoners aboard the Nazi submersible.

The German craft submerged and let go three torpedoes. Later the Nazi commander told Persson one of

Don't Tremble! Dig a Shelter! Air Raid Due Here on Oct. 14

An air raid on Wahington is scheduled for next week—but harmless flares will descend on the District instead of bombs. The raid will be a mock affair, staged by National Guard authorities here October 14 to stimulate recruiting.

Warplanes from Bolling Field and Baltimore will roar over Washington, assigned to "blow" the Capital and the White House off the earth. The District's antiaircraft defenders, the 260th Coast Artillery of the National Guard, will reply with blank shots from the latest type 31-inch aerial rifles and machine guns. The unit's powerful searchlight unit will be in operation.

Brig. Gen. Albert W. Cox, commanding the District Guard, is arranging the air demonstration as the high light of a week's intensive effort to add 552 men to Guard regiments, part of a Nation-wide expansion of the regular forces and militia.

The drive will get underway next Tuesday, with a review of the Guard at 9 p. m. on the Mall. Sixteen officials active in the local government will make up the reviewing party. They include the District Commissioners, Senator William H. King and Representative Jennings Randolph, chairmen of the Senate and House District committees, members of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, John Nolen, jr., and T. S. Settle, of the commission staff; Capt. Patrick H. Tansey, assistant engineer Commissioner, and Col. John Wetherill, senior instructor of the District Army Reserve units.

Batteries of the antiaircraft regiment will stage demonstrations every night of the week in various sections of the city, under the program outlined by Gen. Cox. All but 87 of the new recruits will go to the artillery unit, expanding it by nearly 50 per cent.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

SOUR NOTE: Some American indignation is being engendered by the contention of British officials at British West Indies ports that they can open American mail bags on both northbound and southward airplanes and steamers and go through the contents.

This (some of our officials think) is ticklish business, tends to delay the mails, and is apt to be fruitful of annoyance.

In his last five talks with Adolf Hitler, the British Ambassador to Berlin, Sir Nevile Henderson, told him no less than 19 times that an attack would mean war with England. But almost to the end Hitler declined to believe him.

* * * *

In his 33-minute speech to Congress, President Roosevelt asserted no fewer than 11 times that he means to keep this country out of war . . . But several members still persist in their skepticism.

When I was a small boy I was taught that one assertion was better than a dozen reiterations.

"—back to bows and arrows"

One of Senator Gillette's Iowa constituents has an invention which he thinks can help the French and English break through the Siegfried forts and thus bring the war to an early end . . . It consists of a hollow arrow, filled with high explosives.

He thinks allied soldiers can sneak up and fire these arrows noiselessly at 200 yards. Maybe he'd illustrate?

* * * *

It was Senator Bennett Clark's father, the famed Speaker Champ Clark, who used to tell freshmen members of the House not to pay too much attention to the mail from their constituents.

"You never hear from more than 2 per cent of your constituents," said Champ Clark often, "and from those 2 per cent you hear over and over; they are specialists on everything."

* * * *

Now, strangely enough, Senator Clark as leader of the pro-embargo bloc points to the great influx of pro-embargo mail as a clue to what the entire country is thinking.

And some of the one-time freshmen Representatives whom his father used to advise to ignore their mail are now leaders of the anti-embargo bloc—and heeding Champ's advice not to be overawed by their mail.

"—blarney from the guides"

There's a new wonderment in the eyes of tourists these days as they gaze at the White House portico and office wing through the iron bars of the White House fence. They can no longer flock through the big gates, where cops turn back all those save visitors in line of duty.

"There's where it's all being settled," they say, and they're less than half right.

Outside the fence, honeymooners are more vulnerable to the Avenue's sightseeing guides, who try to blarney them into taking the $2 sightseeing tours of this history-encrusted Capital. One clinching argument for the guides: To snap the newlyweds' pictures with the White House background, with their own cameras.

PROPAGANDA FRONT: On the short wave radio the most frequently heard slogan is the Berlin broadcaster's: "Germany fights for the reparation of an injustice; the others fight for its perpetuation." I've heard it a dozen times an evening, and London's natural retort is "Do you mean Austria, or Czecho-Slovakia, or Poland?"

Farragut's U.S.S. Hartford Comes to Capital For Restoration as Naval Museum Nucleus

The 2,600-ton U. S. S. Hartford tied up at the Washington Navy Yard. Right—Seamen Carl Hitt and L. C. Martin look at plaques on board the ship bearing the famous words of Admiral Farragut, "Damn the torpedoes. Go ahead." The Hartford is here to be restored for the proposed floating Naval Museum, which, if plans materialize, will lie in an artificial basin to be created possibly near the west end of Constitution avenue

By Scott Hart

The U. S. S. Hartford that made Navy glory when Admiral David Farragut cried "Damn the torpedoes, go ahead" in the battle of Mobile Bay, has come off the WPA with a roof above her once flaming gun deck and lies here now.

The rigging and fierce black guns are gone, and hugging the sides of the Navy Yard dock with her strange roof that shuts out the good North Star, the still graceful 225-foot, 2,600-ton sloop appears now, in her processes of restoration, like the traditional ark.

She is the nucleus of several renowned Navy vessels that will comprise exhibits in the floating Naval Museum proposed by President Roosevelt. These ships, if the plan materializes, will demonstrate American Naval development and will lie in an artificial basin, to be created possibly near the west end of Constitution avenue hard by the Navy Department site.

The Hartford felt the Atlantic's wash on her dark wooden sides for possibly the last time in her trip up here from Charleston. Leaving there Wednesday, in tow of the tug Umpqua, she took the sea in a wallowing stride; entered the capes at 8 p. m. Friday; was met in the Potomac by the tug Undaunted and towed to dock—a last trip in fair weather and without incident.

A Navy crew, getting the Hartford in order, walks the decks daily now where the old bearded salts made history. They are shining the brass bell, with its lettering, "U. S. S. Hartford," and looking up occasionally at the aft bulkhead sign "Damn the torpedoes, go ahead." The words go back to the Civil War naval action of August 5, 1864, when the Hartford was moving into a Confederate mine field.

It was her most famous engagement. She roamed the world after that, and was once a training ship for midshipmen. Before coming here she was a station ship at Charleston, where the rigging came down and the deck roof went up. There the President saw her, remarked on her condition, and last year she went on the WPA to get $100,000 worth of overhauling, her second face lifting in 81 years at sea. The first rebuilding was at Mare Island, in 1868.

Census Plum Crop to Ripen Despite Alarm Of Democrats Over Frost in Patronage

By John B. Oakes.

Seriously upset by reports that the 1940 political plum crop would be irreparably damaged by an early frost, some Senators and Representatives breathed more easily last night as they learned that the sunshine of patronage might smile brightly after all.

The excursions and alarums heard on Capitol Hill during the last week—mistakenly thought by many people to have had something to do with the European war—were really traceable to the more immediate domestic question of patronage for the 1940 census. Beating of breasts and tearing of hair there was aplenty; and things haven't entirely quieted down yet.

"Adjustments are being made," the Census Bureau reported last night, but there was still a certain residue of panic noticeable in senatorial offices.

Cause of Excitement

Cause of all the excitement was the sudden decision of the Census Bureau a few weeks ago to employ more than 100 "area managers" at $225 to $275 a month for from six to nine months. Candidates for the positions were chosen at once, and last week a six weeks' course for them opened in Washington, with 170 enrolled.

It all took place so quickly that Senators back in their home States didn't have time to say "patronage," before the candidates were picked and on their way to Washington. That is, some Senators didn't, but others did—and their's the rub.

While some loyal New Dealers were asked to name candidates, it was reported, prominent "purgees," including a few who are up for re-election next year, were not approached. It was pointed out on every hand that the national census is to begin in April, just at the start of the primary season.

All a Misunderstanding

In fact, it was said, some of the candidates were not merely undesired by their Senators but were acutely objectionable to them. In these cases, Governors or national committeemen at war with their Senators were allegedly given the right to nominate the area managers.

To make matters worse, it was understood that the area managers would have the right to name the 560 district supervisors and, through them, the 121,000 enumerators whose appointment traditionally has been the prerogative of Senators and Representatives of the majority party.

Possibility of losing this prize plum that ripens only once every decade aroused a furor on both sides of the Capitol. However, it was stated in responsible quarters yesterday that the clamor arose out of a misunderstanding and that it was always the intention to appoint district supervisors and enumerators in the time-honored manner.

But the status of some of the area managers is still in doubt. Conferences were held, and protests were made to Majority Leader Barkley and even directly to the White House, to the effect that if some Democratic Senators were to be consulted on the appointments, all should be—or was this another "purge?" In this connection, it was pointed out that J. C. Capt, formerly administrative officer of the WPA, had been brought by Secretary Hopkins to the Census Bureau, where he is handling personnel matters.

The Census Bureau admitted yesterday that even though the area manager "school" is now in its second week, "adjustments" are still under way. This statement was interpreted in some Capitol offices as meaning that the objectionable candidates would be eased into other positions, while new candidates, more satisfactory to the outraged Senators, would be brought in to Washington this week or next.

Won't Recognize Seizure, Says U. S.

countervailing duties placed against exports to this country from Germany, which is on the United States' economic "black list."

Asked whether attention had been given t hequesio tnof tariffs on products of the seized territories, he said at his press conference that was a matter that would come along somewhat as it had in cases not entirely dissimilar in the past.

When Germany last year invaded Czecho-Slovakia, the United States, while not recognizing the legitimacy of the seizure, imposed the extra duties on imports from the German-held provinces of Bohemia, Moravia and Slovakia.

Declaration Unilateral

Hull's statement regarding Poland was given added significance in the minds of many observers by reported imminence of German-Russian peace proposals based on recognition of the division of Poland as an accomplished fact. The secretary made it plain, however, that his declaration was unilateral, reflecting only the policy of this Government.

The United States, it was indicated in official circles, will not ask Germany to assume Poland's $179,000,000 war debt to this country as that step would acknowledge permanent control over the seized area. This course was followed in the case of the Czecho-Slovakia invasion, though after Germany took over Austria, the United States notified the Nazi regime it would be held responsible for Austria's debt to this country.

When his attention was called to a statement by the new Polish premier, Gen. Sikorski, that he hoped to recruit an army of 200,000 Poles here, Hull referred reporters to the laws on the subject.

The neutrality act forbids enlistment of American citizens for service in foreign armies but excepts citizens of a belligerent nation in this country transiently who enlist in the service of their own country.

Refusal to recognize the conquest of Poland is in line with this country's withholding of Japanese seizure of Manchukuo and Italian conquest of Ethiopia and Albania.

Hull's reference to force "as an instrument of national policy" was reminiscent of the Kellogg-Briand pact of Paris which outlawed "war as an instrument of national policy." Germany signed that treaty and Russia accepted it while criticizing its "vagueness" and reservations made by some of the powers.

U. S. Security Offering Delayed Because of War

Due to the effect on American markets of European pecae talk, the Treasury yesterday postponed for "at least a week" a new security offering of $526,232,500 of Treasury notes which mature December 15.

This action, it was made clear, is not based on any special knowledge coming to the United States Government that a peaceful settlement of the European war is in prospect. As long as markets are watching the European situation for possible unexpected developments, however, it is difficult to price a new security offering, officials said.

Secretary Morgenthau wants to refund the December note maturity at this time in order to clear the decks for a large financing operation on December 15, involving the borrowing of $750,000,000 or more of new cash.

Harlan Case Dismissed by U. S. Judge

Government Asks The Step, Explaining Peace Rules Field

By the Associated Press

London, Ky., Oct. 2.—The Federal Government today terminated its $250,000 effort to convict 32 individuals and coal companies in Harlan County on a charge that they conspired to deprive labor of legal rights.

Granting a motion of Government counsel, Federal Judge H. Church Ford dismissed the charge.

The court had been told by Special Assistant United States Attorney General Welly K. Hopkins that an "impossible and medieval industrial system which the operators had sworn to perpetuate is ended" and "the rule of the so-called 'gun thug,' is no more" in Harlan camps.

Expects Peace to Last

Hopkins said there was "every indication" that existing peace in the county, torn for years by recurrent outbursts of often fatal labor strife, would be "lasting."

The 11-week trial of the case last summer ended in a jury deadlock.

The blanket indictment charged violation of an 1870 civil rights statute in a conspiracy to cut miners off from rights guaranteed them under the Wagner labor relations act. It was the Government's first attempt to prosecute a criminal suit involving the Wagner law.

Turning to present conditions, Hopkins said:

"Industrial peace at last prevails. And, finally, a return to quiet and normal life, free from the previous existing abuses, for the first time seems assured to these people."

Judge Commends Course

At the conclusion of the Government attorney's statement, Judge Ford said:

"The propriety and wisdom of the Government's action seems so meritorious I have no other action to take."

The original indictment was against 22 companis, 24 operators and 23 former peace officers. Charges were dismissed against five companies and four operators. Six defendants have died and two are in State institutions.

The prosecution charged specifically the companies and individuals conspired to keep the United Mine Workers of America (C. I. O.) from organizing workers.

Roosevelt Gives Hull a Luncheon On 68th Birthday

By the Associated Press

Secretary Hull, on his sixty-eighth birthday yesterday, was a luncheon guest of President Roosevelt.

The lunch was served on the President's desk, and in the center was a tiny white cake with a single candle, prepared at the direction of the Chief Executive.

Otherwise, the Secretary was too busy to observe the anniversary.

His department administers the neutrality act, and has the task of bringing back tens of thousands of Americans from war-stricken Europe, as well as the duty of following fast-moving developments abroad.

Justices Call on Roosevelt, Opening Supreme Court Term

Apparently fully recovered from his illness of last spring, Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes is pictured as he left his home yesterday to attend the opening of the 1939-40 term of the Supreme Court

By the Associated Press

A brief court session and a call on President Roosevelt started the Supreme Court yesterday on a 1939-40 term that may produce far-reaching decisions on outstanding legal problems.

It was the first time since 1935—before the historic fight over Mr. Roosevelt's court reorganization plan—that the justices made the traditional opening-day White House call to pay their respects to the President.

The omissions have been due to absences of the Chief Executive from Washington. Most of the justices have attended the annual White House receptions to the judiciary.

Of the eight justices who filed into the court promptly at noon to open the session, only one did not go to the White House later. He was 77-year-old James Clarke McReynolds, who frequently absents himself from functions where his presence is not mandatory.

The ninth justice—73-year-old Pierce Butler—is in a hospital seriously ill with a bladder ailment.

Pierce Butler, jr., St. Paul attorney, said yesterday the condition of his father, the Justice, "is quite a bit improved, but it may be five or six weeks before he resumes his seat on the bench."

All of the jurists present when the term opened appeared to be in excellent health and invigorated by the four-month rest that started when the court adjourned for the summer June 5.

Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, who spent several weeks in bed last spring because of an ulcer, seemed to be completely recovered. Although he is 77, he looks many years younger.

The courtroom was packed by persons eager to see the opening-day formalities. Those present included the wives of Justices Stone, Roberts, Frankfurter and Douglas.

The 12-minute session consisted of the admission of 24 attorneys to practice before the tribunal and the receipt of a few motions.

Alien Agents U.S. Wants Slip Registration

Innocents Sign Up, But Men Statute Was Aimed at Ignore It

BBy Andrue Barding.

Associated Press Staff Writer

Some officials are wondering whether the law requiring agents of foreign principals to register with the State Department has had the effect that Congress desired.

The debate at the time the law was enacted last year indicated that many of the legislators wanted to force undercover agents, acting in behalf of foreign nations, to come out in the open.

A survey of the 363 registrations made at the State Department shows, however, that a great majority of those registered are not governmental agents, undercover or otherwise. They are simply business representatives, advertising agents, steamship officials, foreign correspondents and the like.

Of the total, 123 are representatives of interests in Great Britain, the dominions and colonies.

Next in number comes Japan, with 38, followed by France with 23, Germany with 21, Spain with 19 and Italy with 18. Russia has six. Thirty-eight different nations have ackonwledge agents in the United States.

Great Britain, which leads in the number of registered agents, does not have the largest number of governmental agents.

She has only nine, whereas Spain has exactly twice as many registered, and Japan 14. Of Spain's 18 governmental agents, many represented the Republican government and their occupation probably has ceased. The total number of agents of foreign governments registered is 96 out of 363, which is only 26 per cent.

The undercover agents, the men that Congress really wanted to reveal, have taken care not to tip their hands by registering.

Hull Launches Move for Trade Pact With Chile

Hearings Begin Nov. 27; Accord Will Further American Cordiality

An important advance in this country's reciprocal trade agreement program was made last night when Secretary of State Hull issued formal notice of intent to negotiate a trade agreement with Chile.

Completion of the negotiations would bring into being the twenty-first accord in the program which the State Department has pressed determinedly despite trade disruption caused by the war. Department officials have held out to the world the idea of such agreements to act as a framework for restoration of world trade after conclusion of peace.

Agreements already have been signed with Cuba, Belgium, Haiti, Sweden, Brazil, Canada, The Netherlands, Switzerland, Honduras, Colombia, Guatemala, France, Nicaragua, Finland, El Salvador, Costa Rica, Czecho-Slovakia, Ecuador, the United Kingdom and Turkey.

Hearings Begin Nov. 27

Submission of briefs to be filed in connection with items covered in the proposed pact with Chile must be made by November 11, the State Department announced. Public hearings on the schedules will begin November 27.

In announcing the new negotiations, the State Department released figures showing that United States imports from Chile dropped from $102,025,000 in 1929 to $11,503,000 in 1933, jumping to $43,636,000 in 1937 but dropping to $28,592,000 last year.

Exports of this country to Chile stood at $55,776,000 in 1929. They dropped to $3,568,000 in 1930, and then began to rise until they reached $24,603,000 in 1938.

"It is a source of great satisfaction, and particularly appropriate," Hull said, "that an announcement of negotiations with another American republic comes at this time when representatives of the nations of this hemisphere are gathered at Panama to discuss problems of mutual interest in this critical period.

Cordiality Emphasized

"One of these problems," he continued, "concerns the finding of means for closer inter-American economic co-operation, the need for which has become even greater in recent weeks."

He pointed out that American investments in Chile for many years have been "of great importance," and expressed hope the trade agreement "will aid in strengthening all forms of economic collaboration between the two countries in the cordial atmosphere which so happily characterizes relations between them today."

Announcement of the agreement came on the eve of a round-table discussion of the possibilities of increasing trade between this country and the Latin-American republics, scheduled to begin at the Commerce Department today. Foreign trade representatives and Government economists will participate.

Fresh Fruits, Vegetables

The State Department said that "with respect to imports, the chief purpose which might be served by the proposed (Chile) agreement would be to make it easier for our consumers, the poor as well as the rich, to obtain supplies of fresh fruits and vegetables the year around."

Among products on which tariff reductions may be granted by the United States are apricots, grapes, peaches, plums, prunes, pears, melons, beans, lentils, chickpeas, onions and garlic.

Among other products listed are calcium, tartrate, copper ore, drugs, furs and fur skins, Guano, substances consisting chiefly of sodium nitrate and potassium nitrate, iodine, iron ore, sheep and lamb skins, sodium sulphate and sulphur.

Principal United States exports to Chile in 1938 were automobile tires, raw cotton, fuel oil, metals, industrial machinery, automobiles and chemicals.

Lloyd Douglas Makes Clear He's Not Here for Politics

Noted Author Says Leave All Such Up To Ones We Elect

Dr. Lloyd C. Douglas, who found a best seller in his "purpose novels," "Magnificent Obsession" and "Green Light," is in Washington to launch a lecture series on "Adventures and Defenses," and wanting it understood that he is not among the droves of petitioners who have descended of late, with political intention.

Dr. Douglas, a robust man with a robust whimsy, a former clergyman who decided he could get his message to a larger audience through books, puffed cigarettes in his Mayflower suite yesterday ahead of his lectures at the First Congregational Church.

"I am no petitioner," he emphasized. "I am here to talk on ethical subjects around the theme 'Adventures and Defenses,' and I'm not going much into that now because it would be telling on myself. But there's no politics. Our elected representatives should be left to their job. If they don't do it well, we aren't bound to re-elect them."

And thereafter the author's views came piecemeal, more like a flurry of impressions, sending him hurrying along when his views of present-day America were asked: "America . . . why it always has been in the midst of an adventure; it began in adventure." The writer seemed unexcited but not bored.

He liked to talk of books, mostly, and he thinks there may be an early trend away from the novels that currently represent the doctrines of despair. "Many people have enough of that already and hardly want to visit the bookstores to pay $2.50 for a fresh load of it," he observed.

His lectures—the first tonight at 8 o'clock—will continue through Friday.

King Indorses Pine to Succeed Cox on Bench

Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, yesterday indorsed U. S. Attorney David Pine for the District Court vacancy created by the death of Justice Joseph W. Cox.

Just returned from Hawaii, Senator King recalled that he had always favored appointment of Washington lawyers, when available, for places on District courts in the Capital.

Capital Forgets War and Rain on Its Moving Day

Despite war (in Europe) and wet weather (right here), hundreds of Washington families were too busy to think much about either yesterday. It was annual moving day.

Trucking company officials were unable to agree whether or not more people were moving this year, but they did indicate there was a greater than usual trend of folks moving into Virginia, especially to Arlington County.

District officials pointed out that although an increasing number of leases here are being staggered each year as to the expiration date, most property owners still seek to have the leases run out October 1 in order to assure having tenants during the slack summer period.

Charles C. Koones, of the Washington Real Estate Board, revealed that vacancies here increased this year from 5 to 6 per cent. This he traced to increased building activity in Washington and surrounding communities.

Prisoner Freed As He Gets Job

George Laughlin, Florida farmer, found guilty last week of false pretense and selling insurance without a license, was released yesterday by Judge Walter J. Casey in Police Court after he spent one week in jail.

Laughlin, who was investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation for possible violation of the neutrality act after he allegedly attempted to obtain munitions orders from several embassies here, was sentenced to 30 days on one charge and $25 or 30 days on the other.

Judge Casey suspended sentence, he said, because Laughlin made restitution of the money he had collected and had obtained a job in Norfolk, Va.

Marshals Raid Communists' Chicago Offices

Officials Subpenaed To Bring Records To Dies Hearing

Chicago, Oct. 2 (AP).—Deputy United States Marshals, working in co-operation with the Dies Committee investigating un-American activities, rushed to the State offices of the Communist Party tonight in an apparent attempt to obtain records of the organization.

When they found the safe had been locked, the officers subpenaed those in charge of the quarters to bring the records to a hearing tomorrow to be conducted by Represenative Martin Dies (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House Committee.

Earlier Dies termed Chicago a "hotbed" of foreign agents and prepared for a thorough inquiry by issuing a series of subpenas for a number of unnamed witnesses.

Dies reported several persons had appeared during the day at a closed hearing "on Nazi, Fascist and Communist activities and propaganda in this area." Others had been summoned, he added, among them "officers of organizations" who had been directed to bring in files, membership lists and financial records.

Among those closeted with Dies were Deputy United States Marshall Joseph Tobin and Lieut. Make Mills, head of the Police Department's "red" squad.

Evidence already in hand, Dies said, "shows very clearly that foreign agents and subversive groups are active." Citizens must regard members of Fascist and Communist organizations, he stated, as "political soldiers of foreign dictators."

Dies, in an address prepared for delivery later to a B'Nai B'Rith lodge, asserted "we should abandon neutrality toward the agents of Hitler and Stalin who are now busy organizing their ideological armies on our soil—ideological armies which can be turned over-night into armies of sabotage, espionage and civil war." He added:

"The foreign agents of Stalin have been pampered long enough in high Government circles, in trade unions and in the camp of the so-called liberals. The foreign agents of Hitler have been petted long enough by so-called patriotic groups."

The time has arrived, he declared, for a "housecleaning."

Carusi Is Given Watch by D. C. Grand Jurors

Assistant District Attorney Carusi yesterday was presented a wrist watch by members of the July grand jury, ending their term of service.

Leonard F. Ruoff, insurance man, foreman, made the presentation. He thanked Carusi for his dilligence and co-operation in presenting evidence during investigations. Carusi had been assigned to grand jury work for the fall term of the District Court, which opens today.

Ruoff also presented a memorial of appreciation to Deputy United States Marshal James S. McCarthy, who has guarded the sessions.

Justice Gordon will begin selection of the fall grand jury today.

Girls' Play Problems Studied

Recreation for girls is a problem with District playground workers, who will present the question at today's session of the Recreation Institute.

The problem of provdiing outlets for girls' activities while boys are using playgrounds for rugged sports and games in their more fully developed atheletic program will be discussed at a meeting at Force School, where 150 white recreation workers are holding morning sessions this week.

"Suggestions are being considered for formation of girls' clubs for more physical activity," said Hugo W. Walter, recreation secretary of the Council of Social Agencies. The council and the District Recreation Commission are sponsoring the institute.

"Problem Children and Disipline for Girls" will be discussed by Edward Reed, principal of Chamberlain School, at today's meeting. workers are holding sessions this week at Temple Congregation Church, with a talk scheduled for today on "The Psychology of Adolescence," by Frank Watts, instructor in psychology at Howard University.

The institute, which opened last week and will continue through Friday, is for District playground and community center workers, as well as those from private centers.

Scott Pleased By Tenant Court

Judge Armand W. Scott predicted success for the "streamlined" new rules of the landlord and tenant division of the Municipal Court when he left the bench yesterday after presiding under the new system for the first time.

The new rules, which have been advocated by the Washington Housing Association and other civic agencies for three years, went into effect yesterday. They are designed to make court operations more simple and easily understood by poor persons sued for rent.

Elaborate legal forms were discarded in favor of plain statements of the facts.

British Warn Nazis Against London Raids

English Freighter Sunk Off Brazil by Unidentified Raider

By Raymond Daniell
Copyright by New York Times.

London, Oct. 2.—Tomorrow, even before Adolf Hitler has an opportunity to make known the proposals which he hopes will induce the French and British to lay down their arms, Prime Minister Chamberlain is expected to disclose the official British reaction to the intimation that the Allies must call off the war or face the combined might of Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia.

Nowhere does there exist any doubt that Chamberlain's answer will be plainly and unequivocably that Great Britain cannot be frightened by threats from Berlin.

It would be surprising if the prime minister failed to reiterate in some form or another his declaration that Great Britain and France are in the war to end recurrent threats of German aggression.

In the lobbies of Parliament it was predicted Chamberlain's speech might be a fuller statement of British war aims. Unless the proposals made by the German Fuehrer satisfy the Allies' demands for redress for the despoiled nations, there is no chance of them being accepted.

Nazi Planes Warned

London, Oct. 2 (AP).—The British government tonight coupled an announcement that the royal air force had reconnoitered at night over Berlin with a warning that German bombers attempting to raid London would "get the reception they deserve."

The British Press Association said Royal Air Force planes had dropped propaganda leaflets over Berlin and Potsdam during their scouting flight.

At the same time, a new menace to British shipping appeared in an admiralty announcement that an armed raider had sunk the 5,051-ton British freighter Clement in the South Atlantic off the coast of Brazil.

The attack was viewed here as meaning that Germany had started a new phase of sea warfare after a lull in the submarine campaign.

The admiralty said the raider had not been identified, but the correct steps are being taken." It said it believed she was either a cruiser or one of Germany's fast, hard-hitting "pocket battleships." The possibility also was advanced that the raider might be an armed merchantman.

(Dispatches from Brazil indicated possibly 30 or more of the crew of 49 had been rescued, and it was feared the rest were lost. The captain and chief engineer were reported captured. A Brazilian news agency said the attacking craft was a submarine.)

Captain Reported Seized

Sinking of the Clement brought total British losses to at least 32 and was the first reported since the 4,646-ton freighter Hazelside was shelled and torpedoed off the Irish coast September 24.

The British, who have made elaborate preparations against possible air raids on London, heart of the empire, have sought to emphasize the "ease" with which the royal air force has been able to make reconnaissance flights over Germany.

Today's communique said "successful" air reconnaissance had been carried out over Germany by day and by night, the night flights including one over Berlin and Potsdam, the first to be announced since the war started. Potsdam, once the home of the Hohenzollerns, is 30 miles southwest of Berlin.

Nazis Laugh at Report

(In Berlin responsible German quarters laughed at the report. "Citizens of Berlin and Potsdam must have slept soundly," one official said, "because no one heard the motors.")

Accounts of the flight over Berlin and Potsdam noted it was 600 miles from London to Berlin and asserted that British planes to reach the German capital would have to fly more than 400 miles over enemy territory.

The warning to German bombers in event of attempted London flights was made in Parliament by Foreign Undersecretary R. A. Butler.

20 Sailors Missing

Recife, Brazil, Oct. 2 (AP).—The shelling and sinking of the British freighter Clement by an armed German raider 60 miles off the Brazilian coast was reported today in dispatches received here.

The reports said Capt. Frederick Harris and Chief Engineer Bryant, of the Clement, were taken aboard the German ship, the name of which was not ascertained.

The Brazilian government news agency, Agencia Nacional, reported, however, the Clement was sunk by a submarine.

Peer's Daughter Stays in Germany

UNITY MITFORD, 24-year-old daughter of Lord Redesdale, is still in Germany, according to reports reaching London. Miss Mitford, who became known as one of Fuehrer Hitler's most ardent disciples, apparently has ignored the many telegrams her father sent, begging his daughter to return to England the torpedoes scored a direct hit and sent the British submarine to the bottom.

Meanwhile, the rest of the crew of the Gun had taken to lifeboats as their ship went down. They were the first to see the British submarine enter the Skagerrak Channel linking the North Sea with the Baltic.

Capt. Persson said his ship was en route to Antwerp when she was halted by the German submarine Saturday. In obedience to an order from the raider, Persson and two of his men went aboard the submarine, with the Gun's papers. The U-boat commander examined the documents, then informed the skipper he would sink the Gun.

A German officer and three sailors from the U-boat thereupon boarded the Gun and placed explosives in her hull. Just as they were completing this task, the British submarine, on the surface, appeared on the horizon and the German officer and sailors hastily scrambled into one of the Gun's lifeboats.

The Gun sank after a terrific explosion as the British and German U-boats vanished under the surface.

Nazis Are Prisoners

The German officer and sailors were virtual prisoners of the Swedish sailors in the Gun's lifeboat until next morning when the attacking German submarine found the lifeboats. Persson and his two men were exchanged for the German officer and three sailors. Later the Gun's master and crew were picked up by the Danish ship.

The German armed yacht Grille was driven off by two Swedish military planes after she had stopped a Swedish commercial vessel inside Sweden's territorial waters.

The Grille was said to have been trying to force the Swedish ship beyond the territorial water limit when the Swedish planes appeared. The armed yacht retreated hastily to sea under a shower of strafing machine-gun bullets from the planes, according to the report, which was not officially confirmed in Stockholm.

Ciano Leaves Berlin Early, Axis Strained

Trip Not a Success For Germany, Rome Dispatch Says

By Otto D. Tolischus
Copyright by The New York Times.

Berlin, Oct. 2.—While Bolshevism is rapidly pushing into a sphere hitherto pre-empted by National Socialism, the Rome-Berlin Axis likewise suffered an audible crack today as Count Ciano departed from his conference with Fuehrer Hitler earlier than expected and amid generally negative circumstances.

The Italian foreign minister left today without seeing Hitler again and though German Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop and other government party officials accompanied him to the railway station, his departure was announced in a perfunctory communique which was bare of all the usual phrases about complete agreement and the customary atmosphere of hearty unanimity.

Ciano Did Not Yield

There were many tributes from official quarters and the press to Italy's magnificent peace policy, in accord with the German-Russian peace offensive now under way.

But it also was definitely stated in official quarters that there will be no diplomatic steps by Italy or Germany to transmit any German "peace offer" to France or England, nor any five or seven power conference, such as Premier Mussolini is believed to have had in mind.

(A Rome dispatch said Ciano did not yield an inch on Italy's neutrality, and that his trip "does not seem a success as far as Germany is concerned," and "even less a defeat for Italy." The dispatch noted what it called Italy's desire to minimize, as far as possible, the importance of the Berlin conversations.)

Opens "Peace Offensive"

Berlin, Oct. 2 (AP).—Germany has started what is officially termed a "broad-minded peace offensive" which may find its culmination in Adolf Hitler's Reichstag address this week.

Nazis said today it would require an equally broad-minded acceptance to stave off a World War even now.

The date of the Reichstag meeting still is to be announced.

Through Count Ciano, who left here at noon after a visit of less than 24 hours, authoritative sources said Mussolini would have in detail what Nazis said were the three main points of Hitler's conversations with Il Duce's son-in-law.

These points were given authoritatively as:

The possibilities of the future in Europe, including Italy's share in what will or may happen.

Germany's conception of various spheres of interest in eastern Europe.

Shall not permit enlistments or preparation of expeditions in favor of the belligerents on their soil, or the outfitting of ships for hostilities, or establishment of radio or other belligerent communications systems.

Shall not admit belligerent warships to neutral ports or waters in numbers of more than three at a time, and for not longer than 24 hours.

Shall demand that belligerent ships and aircraft seeking hospitals in American zones respect neutrality laws and regulations over the rights and duties of neutrals and belligerents.

Shall regard flight of belligerent aircraft over American territory as an infraction of neutrality.

Shall be authorized to place guards aboard merchant vessels of belligerents in American ports. Excessive delays in port are to bring internment.

Shall permit transfer of a belligerent vessel to a neutral American republic provided it is done in good faith and without a resale.

Shall not permit armed merchant vessels in their ports to carry more than four 6-inch cannon on the prow. Such vessels shall not have reinforced sides or other equipment for offense.

May exclude belligerent submarines or admit them under the condition they enter afloat flying their flag.

This last point was in accordance with the Argentine viewpoint. The United States had proposed that they be barred from American ports.

Another resolution approved provided that the neutrality committee shall study the question of contraband lists. It expressed opposition to inclusion on contraband lists of foodstuffs, clothing and articles intended for civil populations of belligerents.

The "safety zone" for shipping excludes the territorial waters of foreign possessions in the Americas. The Argentine delegation in this connection reserved its long-proclaimed right to sovereignty over the Falkland Islands, a British possession.

Allies Keep Pressure on Nazi Lines

Local Enemy Attack Repulsed East of Saar, Say French

By Taylor Henry
Associated Press Staff Writer

Paris, Oct. 2.—French and British troops on the Western Front continued pressure against German lines today as the war entered its second month without major change in battle positions.

Although the French government watched German diplomatic maneuvers to reach a peace settlement, Adolf Hitler's efforts apparently had no effect on the military situation.

The French high command, in a communique tonight, said "local enemy attacks have been repulsed" near Saarlouis and Saarlautern and east of the Saar River.

German Localities Shelled

The communique reported that German artillery fire over the French positions was falling "on German localities behind our line."

Tactics of the high command seemed to be keeping steady pressure on German land lines while naval forces pressed the economic blockade at sea.

At the same time, however, French troops constantly are seeking to improve their positions on German territory so that the Nazi command will have that much harder a job if an offensive is launched.

Military observers in Paris reported it likely that when the Nazis see their efforts to make peace have failed and the blockade begins to be felt, the German army probably will be ordered to strike in force on land and in the air in an effort to break the siege.

Peace Move Held Failure

Diplomatic observers said they considered that German maneuvers for peace after the collapse of Poland already had failed in view of the strong position taken both by France and Britain even before any formal offer has been made.

Main French interest seemed to be in watching the method German diplomacy is using and the effect it is likely to have on the German people. French observers said they were convinced that Hitler knew his peace plan was foredoomed to failure, but that he was carrying on with it to bolster a thesis at home that France and Britain were aggressors.

After the Berlin visit of Italian Foreign Minister Ciano, some French observers considered it possible the Italian ambassadors to Paris and London eventually would submit a peace plan.

Military authorities said that aside from broad strategical reasons for the slowness of the advance into Germany, there were equally good tactical ones resulting from the nature of the no-man's-land in front of the Sigfried Line and the extent of German fortifications.

Mines Cleaned Out

For example, the French more or less "occupied" Warndt Forest sector, opposite the German city of Saarbruecken, in one of the first operations of the war almost a month ago.

They have been rooted to their first positions in the 6,000-square-yard forest while trained engineer detachments cautiously cleaned out mines planted there by Germans.

The French announced today that they already had found approximately 3,000 mines in the Warndt Forest, each of which had to be sought out individually and exploded.

In other sectors artillery now is being used in an effort to explode a majority of the mines before the French start any new action. French observers noted numbers were exploded in each section by an artillery shell which set off a string of mines almost 1,000 yards long.

Semiofficial sources said today French poilus had captured more than 60 Nazi villages. French guns, they said, now dominate the industrial valleys of the lower Saar, Blies and Lauter rivers.

Stalin Spends 2 Hours With Latvian Foreign Minister

Latvian's Reception Cool

Munters was received in diplomatically correct fashion, but his reception contrasted with the effusive welcomes that have been given others in the stream of foreign diplomats who have been arriving in Moscow in recent weeks.

His reception contrasted, however, with the effusive welcomes that have been given others in the stream of foreign diplomats who have been arriving in Moscow in recent weeks.

Diplomatic circles took it for granted that the Soviet government would make demands upon Latvia similar to those which resulted in her neighbor, Estonia, granting Russia increased trade concessions and the right to establish naval and air bases on two Estonian islands and at one port.

(The United Press said Lithuanian Foreign Minister Urbsys will discuss "proposals" which the Lithuanian Minister in Moscow, Liudes Natkevicius, carried to Kaunas on Saturday.

(It was understood that these proposals involve a Soviet request for privileged through transport of Russian goods on the old Russian railroad from Romny by way of Lithuania to the Latvian port of Liabu, where a Russian naval base may be established.—Editor's note.)

A Soviet military mission arrived at Tallinn, Estonian capital, today to put into operation the Soviet-Estonian pacts.

Gafencu, it was said, may yet change his mind, however, depending upon a report from Saracoglu, who is acting as unofficial spokesman in Moscow for the Balkan nations.

(Whatever results from the Moscow talks, foreign diplomats in Bucharest predicted it hardly could add to Soviet-German friendship.

(With Russia apparently determined to gain control of the Black Sea and its bordering nations, the result, foreign observers said, can only curb German influence in that part of the world—influence which the Nazis counted as all-important for obtaining food and war supplies.)

The Turkish delegation headed by Saracoglu failed to see Soviet Foreign Minister Molotoff today as expected, apparently awaiting instructions from home.

It was considered likely the Turks would be received tomorrow in the Kremlin where so many vital negotiations have been concluded recently.

A Riga dispatch by Tass, official Soviet news agency, announced over the radio tonight, said the Latvian government realized that "conditions in the eastern part of Europe are greatly changed" and that therefore Latvia had decided to go to Moscow for negotiations.

Italy Awaits Nazi Signal for Peace Drive

Rome Feels Ciano Also Was Told Part Hitler Expects of It in War

By the Associated Press

Rome, Oct. 2.—Foreign circles tonight reported a growing feeling that Adolf Hitler had asked this end of the Rome-Berlin Axis to lead a "peace offensive" on the Allies.

Foreign Minister Ciano was speeding back from Berlin, bringing what diplomatic observers believed to be a request from the Fuehrer that Italy present a proposal to end the European war now that Poland has been conquered.

These sources said they considered it likely Hitler also let Ciano know what he expected of Premier Mussolini should Britain and France turn down the Berlin-Moscow peace overtures, as generally expected.

"Decisive Point" Seen

Italy's desire to stay out of the conflict, however, was as apparent as ever.

Informed circles said they expected Italy to remain in her present nonbelligerent status as long as possible, and in any event for some time to come.

Even if Hitler should ask aid eventually under the military alliance, these sources thought such a request would be made only when help actually was needed since a call on Italy for help now, they said, would be interpreted as a sign of German weakness.

Virginio Gayda, authoritative Fascist writer, warned today in Il Giornale d'Italia that European powers were at a "decisive point."

Axis Mentioned Again

"Two currents, one constructive and the other destructive, are apparent here and there among the belligerents in the west," Gayda continued.

He declared Italy would prefer to hope those "healthy forces responsible for the two national interests and those for Europe itself may prevail over those which gravitate more or less consciously toward the irreparable."

Diplomats agreed an attempt would be made to persuade the Allies, acceptance of peace would spare the countries inevitable losses while it would give Germany and Italy what they ask—colonies for Hitler and certain advantages in Africa for Mussolini.

New evidence appeared after Hitler's talk with Ciano that the Italians remained an ally of Berlin. Mention of the Axis reappeared in Fascist editorials after disuse of the word for a month.

Marylander Tells of Duel by Plane, U-Boat

By George Thorpe.

An eyewitness account of the duel in mid-Atlantic on September 17 between a German submarine and a British Royal Air Force bomber, immediately after the torpedoing of the freighter Kafiristan, was told The Post yesterday by a 27-year-old Maryland man, passenger on the rescuing S. S. American Farmer.

Malcolm Rorty, of Lusby, Calvert County, Md., described the machine-gunning of the submarine, its frantic efforts to submerge and, as he believes, its sinking.

"The first hint I had that something was up came when the Farmer changed course suddenly about 3 p. m. Sunday (September 17) when we were about 350 miles off Ireland," he related.

"A ship's officer told me of the Kafiristan's S O S as we steamed ahead at forced draft. It wasn't long before I made out the submarine on the horizon," Rorty said. "She signaled us with her helioscope (electric beam used to send Morse code messages), locating for us the lifeboats holding the tramp steamer's survivors. We ran up pennants to reply.

"When we were less than a mile away the British plane swooped down suddenly, out of the east. She came down very low, to about 100 feet, and started machine gunning the deck of the sub.

"I could see little figures running toward the conning tower. It seemed surprising that the sub had not kept a lookout for a plane. They seemed to be paying attention only to the wreckage of the Kafiristan and the lifeboats."

Rorty, a Harvard Business School graduate, told how he snapped pictures of the undersea and aircraft from the deck of the American Farmer. "I had expected some excitement before the trip was over and had my camera all set up," he said.

As the submersible made desperate efforts to submerge—"it seemed to take her quite a while," Rorty said—the bomber circled back, dived again to a low altitude, and "dropped two bombs, swooping twice over the U-boat."

"After the submarine disappeared, the plane flew directly over the ship and the four men in the crew waved jubilantly, to tell us they'd sunk her," he recounted.

Rorty was surprised by the reaction of witnesses to the duel. Many of the 29 survivors of the Kafiristan, who were taken aboard the Farmer following the battle, seemed "sorry to see the sub sunk, because the commander had treated them so well."

They reported, he said, that the German captain, a young man who spoke perfect English, had offered to tow the lifeboats until they should be picked up, and had asked if they had a sufficiency of food and water.

Walsh Assails Criticism of Arms Embargo

Assertion It Flouts International Law Called Falsehood

The claim that the present arms embargo conflicts with international law, as set forth in the majority report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, was characterized as "absolutely false" last night by the Rev. Edmund A. Walsh, vice president of Georgetown University and regent of the Foreign Service School.

"I protest as one who has given some attention to international law against the falsity of the statement in the committee report that any belligerent has the right under international law to purchase any article in any neutral country," he said. "That is a misstatement. It is absolutely false."

"I regret to see the truth abused by people in high places who ought to know better—and probably do know better," he continued. "If this embargo is to be repealed, let it be done on the merits of the case, and not on the basis of any such Machiavellian skullduggery."

He spoke before nearly 300 Army Reserve officers at a meeting in the departmental auditorium sponsored by the Quartermasters Association and the Reserve Officers Association.

Discussing Communist and Nazi philosophies, Father Walsh declared he was "not sure which is more dangerous, for Moscow would destroy religion while Berlin would corrupt it for the uses of a pagan state."

The pending neutrality bill involves more than the embargo issue, he declared, for the cash and carry provisions and the regulations involving American shipping constitute "a fundamental alteration of our foreign policy."

"The freedom of the seas, a cardinal principle of American history for which we fought in 1812 and 1917 . . . is to all intents and purposes abandoned" by the proposed law, he asserted.

Women Crowd Senate Galleries

the hope of getting a glimpse of history in the making.

J. R. Perry, deputy sergeant at arms and head doorkeeper, said it was the largest crowd in the Senate wing since the heyday of Huey Long. There were 900 packed in galleries with a seating capacity of 700, he said, and an equal number waiting.

The spectators broke spontaneously into applause when Senator Borah ended his two-hour address.

Go Hungry to Stay

Though there was occasional shuffling, as small groups tip-toed in and out, the majority sat throughout the four-hour Senate session, despite the fact that they obviously had sacrificed lunch to keep their places.

With deadly seriousness, they leaned forward to hear Borah and Pittman as their voices, now and then, dropped to inaudibility. Unlike the House, the Senate is not equipped with sound amplifiers.

While many senatorial wives were in the family gallery, Mrs. Borah was absent. Mrs. Alice Longworth was present.

The chamber floor was lined with House members, who increased from 100 to 150 as Borah spoke. One of the most interested of this group was Chairman Bloom, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, whose job it will be to handle the neutrality legislation when it returns to the House.

Press Gallery Filled

Only in the family gallery were spectators permitted to stand in the rear of the seats and occupy the aisles. Ignoring District fire regulations, the ushers, pressed by Senators who escorted friends or constituents to the gallery door, packed the visitors in so tightly no aisle passageway was left.

While the Justice Department sent a half dozen G-men to the Capitol yesterday, attendants said they were occupied on the House side and that another group would be sent to the Senate wing. If they arrived, they did not make themselves known to the sergeant at arms' office.

Corridors outside the galleries were kept clear, the crowd being held at the first landing. Only as seats became vacant were they permitted to ascend to the galleries.

Anticipating a continuation of the demand for many more seats than are available, Perry said today he will separate the crowd at the marble steps so as to keep corridors open. Those who cannot find standing room on the steps will have to leave.

"Lots of people think that a card signed by a Senator will get them in," he said. "But it's first come, first served, and we've got just a limited number of seats."

Russia Reported Massing Troops Near Afghanistan

By Hallett Abend.

Copyright by New York Times

Shanghai, Oct. 2.—Coincident with reports Afghanistan is mobilizing males between 25 and 45 to repel border violations on the part of Soviet forces, reports reaching Shanghai from China's deep interior say enormous bodies of Soviet troops have been entering Sinkiang, using the highways connecting Urumchi with the Turkish-Siberian Railway.

Sinkiang is China's most western province, comprising all China between Mongolia and Tibet, with about 550,000 square miles of territory between Russia and India, but bordered on the west by Afghanistan.

Some reports are rather alarming. These are causing a stir in Japanese military circles, which declare the Soviet Union already has nearly 300,000 armed men inside Sinkiang.

It is conjectured these troops might be either used against the British in India or sent to Shensi to aid Chinese Communists.

He virtually called the war a holy crusade.

Pittman and Borah Clash on Arms Embargo Repeal

we will be able to prevent it . . .

"I do not know that we can. That is in the lap of the gods . . ."

Stresses War Fears

Borah's main thesis was his oft expressed fear that repeal of the arms embargo would put this country in a position where it could not deny further help, in extension of credits and even manpower, to Britain and France.

"We will be in the war from the time the machinery is set in motion which carries these instrumentalities (arms) to the seat of war," he said.

He declared embargo repeal "will bring the war into our very midst" by spotting for destruction munitions plants and arsenals in this country, asking, "Will they wait until the cargo is in course of shipment to plant the dynamite or to drop the bomb or to destroy the shippers?"

Soviet Neutrality Questioned

Pittman and Borah parried thrusts in the sole direct verbal exchange when the Idahoan questioned whether Russia was "neutral" as asserted by Pittman.

"It does not concern the United States whether it is neutral or not," interrupted Pittman. "I do contend of course that the safety and peace of our own people is first."

"—and last," added Borah.

"Yes," continued Pittman, "but we cannot have it last and have peace if we arouse the enmity of the people of the world by discriminating, becoming unneutral through any act we have. I say that today it is perfectly evident that the rejection of this law would not have anything on earth to do with our getting into war. But at the present time, with the existing alliances of Europe, and in view of the fact that Russia and Rumania and Italy are neutral, these arms and munitions are moving, or can move, into those countries, and can move into Germany."

Borah Points to Italy

"If that is true," replied Borah, "let us change the law so that they cannot. Let us not surrender our neutrality because someone else is playing the game in a different way. If I may be permitted to say so, we know perfectly well that the neutrality of Italy is just the same as the neutrality of some people in this country. They are playing the game with Germany and they are covering it up under 'neutrality,' and it is proposed that we play the game of 'neutrality' by assisting France and Great Britain."

"Yes," retorted Pittman, "and the Senator has always objected to assisting France and Great Britain, and I have not urged it. But he does not object to sending goods to Italy when he knows it is in alliance, as he has just said, with Germany. He does not object to sending goods to Russia, although he knows it is in accord with Germany. The Senator says let us get a law that will stop it. Such a law has not yet been proposed."

"If the Senator," Borah replied, "will stand with me to maintain the neutrality law as it now is, I will sit down in a room with him and I venture to say that if he feels as I do, before we come out of that room there will be no goods going to Italy, which is no more neutral than Germany itself."

"How about Russia," snapped Pittman.

France Pointed To

"Does the Senator regard Russia as neutral?" said Borah. "The only reason why we did not include Russia under the decree of neutrality was that France does not want to get into a fight with Russia. Everyone knows that Russia is unneutral, that she is a part of the fight, that she is furnishing the means of fighting. Why not say so and stop it?"

Pittman said, "We would have to say so by a law declaring that neutrals who were not fighting, but were under suspicion of being or were known to be in combination with some who are fighting, would come under the act."

"Does the Senator think Russia is not fighting?" asked Borah.

"I do not know whether she is fighting or not," said Pittman.

"The people of Poland know it," replied Borah.

"I think the fight in poor Poland is through," Pittman said.

"Yes," said Borah, "and Russia helped to do the business."

"They wiped her out," added Pittman, "and this law of ours did not prevent them from being wiped out."

Borah and Pittman agreed that "we are not running the business of Europe."

"If I had to run the business of Europe," said Borah, abruptly ending the exchange, "what I would do here is not discuss cash and carry. I would declare war. That's what I would do if I had to run the business of Europe. And so much for that."

The Foreign Relations chairman voiced doubt that the American Merchant Marine would be seriously injured by the shipping ban, but said they might have to engage in Pacific and South Atlantic trade abandoned by other countries. Even if trade sacrifice is involved, he said "no patriotic citizen" will oppose making it.

Borah's Seven Points

Senator Borah in his speech listed seven main points. They were:

That this Government had the right without invading international law principles to pass a law providing for the arms embargo.

That other Nations have passed such laws with no question raised that they interferred with international law.

That the leading authorities on international law sustain this principle.

That when the arms embargo law was passed it met with practically universal support from the Government and people of the United States.

That "to repeal the law after war has been begun and under the circumstances which now prevail and the intent accompanying the repeal, will be a violation of international law and a distinct affirmative act of intervention."

That is "my belief repeal is urged with the purpose of favoring the Allies and with the intent of rendering service to them in this present war."

Enactment of the arms embargo, he called a "noble pledge which ought, in the name of peace, in the name of happiness and honor of our people, be kept."

NOW! WE OFFER AN IMPROVED

Vitamin "D" Milk

It's Homogenized!

(Pronounced Home-oj-en-ized)

Regular Homogenized

Homogenized Milk means Cream in every drop! By a special pressure process the cream is distributed all through the milk. It cannot rise to the top. Read below the many advantages of this new Homogenizing process.

CREAM IN EVERY DROP

Remember how you've always had to shake a bottle of milk to distribute the cream through it?

Now you can buy Homogenized Milk . . . milk in which the cream is already distributed, and cannot rise to the top.

It's easier to digest: Homogenizing breaks up the cream—by pressure—into tiny particles that form a smaller, softer curd in the stomach, making digestion easier, even for babies.

It is highly nutritious: Because it digests easily, much of the food value of this milk is assimilated by the system.

It has a new flavor: Because there is cream in every drop, this milk has a grand, new taste. Children love it, and grown-ups enjoy milk more than ever.

It contains Vitamin D: This is the precious vitamin so necessary to develop and maintain strong bones and sound teeth. Every quart contains 400 U.S.P. Units.

Every mother will welcome this milk that is creamy rich from top to bottom. Order Sealtest-Approved Homogenized Vitamin D Milk from our milkman, or telephone MIchigan 1011.

Last Polish Troops Yield To Nazi Army

Hela Peninsula Surrenders as Reich Forces Enter Warsaw

Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Oct. 2.—As German troops began their march into silent, smoking Warsaw yesterday noon, the last isolated point of Polish resistance, the Hela Peninsula, into Danzig Bay north of Gydnia, surrendered unconditionally to German forces which have been bombing it from land, sea and air for one month.

Some 2,000 weary Polish soldiers and their 52 officers laid down their arms while many miles to the south their conquerors marched into the smoldering ruins of what once was their capital.

The German army and navy, according to a communique of the high command, has been preparing a final attack on the troops in Hela Peninsula, but surrender came before the last destructive blow was delivered. Among the prisoners taken was Rear Admiral von Unruh, former commander of the Polish navy.

Troops Interned

The German troops occupied the Warsaw suburb of Praga on the east side yesterday, and occupation continued step by step today. The Polish troops, meanwhile are leaving the city, marching off to designated points in the surrounding countryside, where they will be interned.

The Polish garrison, according to German reports, is evacuating the city in the best of order. The Germans are impressed by the fact these troops still are well uniformed and not demoralized as were those who were trapped and fought in desperation for a week around Kutno.

Polish army cars, which German reports state were "seen almost for the first time," were included in the long column of men and vehicles which have been marching from the capital all day and night.

Fires Rage in Warsaw

The German occupation of Warsaw is taking place without any dramatic military demonstrations. In the city many fires still are raging. Occupation is proceeding relatively slowly, however, and is not expected to be completed before tomorrow or the next day.

Victory demonstrations, however, will take place in the Reich all week. Beginning tomorrow, flags will be hung from every window, church bells will ring every day at noon for seven days.

Additional color is added by the occasional columns of German troops from Poland on their way to the Western Front. Their railway cars and trucks were bedecked with flowers and covered with inscriptions and caricatures.

legislative program with the understanding that it is for the purpose of keeping the United States out of the European war."

Wants War "Impossible"

At the same time, Green demanded that Congress, in dealing with American neutrality and foreign policy, make it impossible "for America to be dragged into the European conflict."

Harking to this Nation's experiences in the last war, Green said the United States entered it "with lofty hopes and high aims."

"I ask you what great principle was settled by that war? Did the war serve to end war? The answer comes from Europe now."

Green said labor was determined to maintain its equilibrium and would refuse to be "moved by war psychology."

He warned that if the United States becomes involved in war "labor's gains will be wiped out overnight; labor will be regimented. We will be reduced to a regimented force at home, compelled to serve under a war emergency program.

Sees A. F. of L. Stronger Than Ever

"Can we afford to risk that for the settlement of these differences which have arisen between European nations?"

Touching briefly on domestic labor problems, Green asserted that the "voice of the American Federation of Labor is stronger today in the councils of the Nation than it ever has been."

Without naming the Congress for Industrial Organization, he referred to the sit-down strikes of a few years ago and said they were part of a "revolutionary program" the Federation had been asked to accept.

"In the protection and preservation and maintenance of our economic, social and political philosophy," Green asserted, "we have refused to compromise with those who preach a strange philosophy."

Japan to Avoid Europe's War

Tokyo, Oct. 2.—Japan's determination not to participate in the European war was reaffirmed today by Premier Abe and Foreign Minister Nomura in a conference with prefectural governors summoned to hear the new cabinet's policy.

Nomura said "as Japan's national policy is immutably directed toward settlement of the China affair all her foreign relations here and her attitude toward other powers is to be guided in part by that policy."

The Federal Diary:

Hatch Act Rulings Scheduled; District Employes Not Affected

By Alfred Friendly.

Within the week the Justice Department is expected to issue a series of rulings on the Hatch act, the principal one of which will give the go-ahead signal to employes of the District government to continue whatever political activities they may have followed in the past.

The ruling will simply be to the effect that District employes are not Government employes in the sense of the Hatch act, and are therefore not prohibited from taking "active part in political management or in political campaigns."

Outstanding benefactor in such a ruling will be Commissioner George E. Allen, whose diligent interest in the great game of politics would have been seriously curtailed had his job been declared under the purview of the legislation.

As a result of the decision, District employes will be subject only to such regulations on political activity as the Commissioners may prescribe. Although the regulations which govern their employment parallel civil service rules, District jobholders are not, strictly speaking, civil service employes, and are not confined by the Civil Service Commission's ban against political activity. The latter is even stricter, perhaps, than the provisions of the Hatch act itself.

Laura Ingalls, aviatrix who showered the Capital with pamplets and thus fell afoul of Civil Aeronautics Authority regulations against flying over downtown Washington, will catch it from the CAA Friday or Saturday. The CAA is determined to punish her, but declines to become the fall guy for the benefit of a publicity campaign . . . S. M. Garwood, production credit commissioner of the Farm Credit Administration, is reported to be leaving his post for bigger and better things . . . The Park Service plans to set aside a small but well-stocked fishing pool in the new C. & O. Canal Parkway for the exclusive use of youngsters. Adult Izaak Waltons can only look on, but may not toss in a line themselves.

High postal officers are authority for an almost incredible story concerning working of the salary-fixing system for fourth-class "cross roads" postmasters. Its veracity, however, is attested by the fact that the principal aim of the forthcoming convention of the National Association of Postmasters is to remedy the situation.

Under the present methods, salaries for fourth-class postmasters are based on the number of annual cancellations made by the office, and the weight of the mail handled. Average salary is about $500, between the extremes of $200 and $800.

For the sake of a higher salary, it is to the interest of a postmaster to increase the business of his office. Sometimes, says Postoffice Department executives, small-town postmasters enlist the not quite legitimate co-operation of their neighbors. These agreeable friends have been known to send each other a lot of needless mail, as, for instance, a carton of what are supposed to be eggs. Actually, however, the box contains brickbats or stones.

A few such parcels boost the weight figures of the office by a considerable amount. Since the cost of mailing is relatively negligible, a postmaster can make money by encouraging this phony mail and "kicking back" the cost of the postage to his friends. The higher salary which he gets is more than enough to reimburse him.

Since 99 per cent of the postmasters are honest and deplore the practice, they will attempt to draft resolutions for Congressional action to fix their salaries by some other method, perhaps on the basis of the number of patrons in the area served, rather than by the amount of mail.

The postmaster's convention, to begin October 10, threatens to turn the town inside out. Some 4,500 postmasters, most of them bringing their wives or husbands, as the case may be, have already paid their registration fee. The Mayflower Hotel will banquet 3,400 of them, certainly the largest banquet ever held in Washington and perhaps in the country.

Cardinal Mundelein Dies at 68 in Sleep at Illinois Home

Cardinal Mundelein a local figure, brought immediate response from the White House. President Roosevelt telegraphed Bishop Sheil:

"A career of great goodness and usefulness has been brought to an untimely close with the passing of Cardinal Mundelein. He served his day and generation with unfailing fidelity to the highest principles of Christianity.

"As a citizen who gloried in our American democracy he was the advocate and exemplar of justice and righteousness. Whether in the relation of the individual to the state or in the field of interntaional affairs his influence was always potent for peace.

"My personal acquaintance with Cardinal Mundelein began when he was Bishop of Brooklyn, and I mourn the loss of a true friend—a close friend for many years."

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

On Navy Day, October 27, last year, Cardinal Mundelein accompanied the President on a tour of the Navy Yard in Washington and was his guest on a cruise down the Potomac aboard the Presidential yacht. That was the Capital's last glimpse of him.

Normally a quiet man, Cardinal Mundelein was capable of streng speech when aroused. Nazi charges of immorality in Catholic institutions was the occasion for an outburst in 1937. He characterized Adolf Hitler as "an Austrian paper hanger and a poor one at that." He called Paul Joseph Goebbels a "crooked minister of propaganda."

Vatican Upholds Cardinal

The Vatican upheld the cardinal as a "courageous" defender of the faith, and the State Department replied to German protests that the statement was unofficial.

Cardinal Mundelein was an ardent liberal, intensely interested in alleviating distress of the underprivileged.

President Roosevelt's interest in the same cause is equally well known. This mutuality of interest brought the two men together and cemented their friendship. When President Roosevelt lunched with Cardinal Mundelein in Chicago in 1936, many began to believe reports that the prelate had been put on the list of unofficial White House advisers.

McAdoo His Friend

William Gibbs McAdoo, former United States Senator and Wilsonian Secretary of the Treasury, probably was the first high administration official to pay Cardinal Mundelein a call. The Secretary had gone to Chicago to visit the Great Lakes Naval Training School. He held up his special train for more than an hour to pay tribute to the man who had raised more than $4,000,000 in the Liberty Loan drive.

In Washington the mourners from President Roosevelt's Cabinet included Secretary of State Hull, Secretary of Commerce Hopkins, Secretary of Labor Perkins and Postmaster General Farley.

Others who joined the Nation-wide tribute were Alfred E. Smith, Methodist Bishop Ernest Lynn Waldorf, Episcopal Bishop George Craig Stewart, Archbishop Francis J. Spellman, of New York; former Vice President Charles G. Dawes, Dr. Louis L. Mann, of Chicago, and Archbishop Michael J. Curley, of Baltimore.

Chicago Mourns Death

The Chicago city council proclaimed the Cardinal's death as "an occasion for civic mourning."

Lower East Side New York gave Cardinal Mundelein to the world at about the same time it was nurturing the late Patrick Cardinal Hayes and Alfred E. Smith. In later years. Cardinal Mundelein grew very proud of the drab surroundings of his youth, so proud that when Martin-Dillon, his biographer, had written his birthplace as "upper East Side," the Cardinal corrected it to read "lower."

His parents on both sides were German whose ancestors had lived in America for at least four generations. One of his ancestors fought in the Revolution. An immediate grandfather died as a soldier in the Civil War.

At 17 he was the youngest student ever to receive a bachelor's degree from Manhattan College. President Cleveland offered the brilliant student an appointment to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, but Mundelein already had heard the call of his church and determined upon a career devoted to saving lives and souls, rather than warfare.

He pursued priestly studies in this country and at Rome, where he was ordained, and then sent back to take charge of a Lithuanian church at Williamsburg, N. Y. He became chancellor of the Brooklyn diocese in 1897, a post that brought him into frequent contact with bankers and financial leaders of the city.

It was his talent with money and for administration and building—he was a first-class architect—that raised quickly the youngest member of the heirarchy in the United States—auxiliary bishop of Brooklyn—to Chicago as archibishop. Fate—or Providence—saved him for greater laurels at the outset of his career in the West.

Hundreds of civic leaders attending a banquet in his honor in 1916 were violently stricken with food poisoning immediately after the soup course. It was found later that the soup had been poisoned by one of the cooks, an anarchist. The archbishop escaped. He had passed up the soup.

Built Own Seminary

Charity and the improvement of education were passions with Cardinal Mundelein. He discovered soon after coming to Chicago that there was no seminary in the diocese for training priests. He built a magnificent, $13,000,000 one in the suburb later named Mundelein.

Chicago's parochial school system ranks as one of the finest in the country due to Cardinal Mundelein's efforts.

Though he had spent a large part of his life building, Cardinal Mundelein once turned thumbs down on a suggestion for a vast cathedral, saying:

"I would rather lift up the poor and despairing to a better life than to rear the greatest cathedral in the world."

Rewards for his success came in 1924 and 1926. In the earlier year, he walked in the Vatican with his old friend and schoolmate, Patrick Hayes, to receive the red hat of the cardinal. It was the first time the church had reached west of the Alleghany Mountains to select a cardinal. The second reward was the thirty-first International Eucharistic Congress when he was host to 1,000,000 of the devout from all sections of the world. It was the first Eucharistic Congress ever held in the United States.

How 3 Mothers out of 5 RELIEVE THE MISERY OF THEIR Children's Colds

"I USE VICKS VAPORUB JUST AS MY MOTHER DID"

VICK HOMES—3 out of 5

For two generations Vicks VapoRub has been mothers' standby. It is used in more homes than all other medications of its kind put together.

CAN BE USED FREELY . . . VapoRub is an external treatment. There's no "dosing"—no risks of stomach upsets. You simply rub it on throat, chest, and back.

ACTS DIRECT . . . VapoRub goes right to work to bring relief, two direct ways at once: (1) It acts direct on the skin like a poultice; (2) Its medicated vapors, released by the warmth of the body, are inhaled direct to the irritated air passages with every breath. This direct poultice-and-vapor action quickly loosens phlegm—clears the air passages—checks tendency to cough—eases muscular soreness or tightness—relieves irritation—brings comfort and invites restful sleep.

SENSATIONAL RESULTS IN CLINICAL TESTS

VapoRub is an important medication in Vicks Plan which was tested in a clinic of 2,650 children. Look at the results! Reports from supervising doctors show sickness from colds cut 54.95%; school absences due to colds 77.99% among the children following the Plan—who were instructed to obey specified health rules, to use Vicks Va-tro-nol (nasal medication) when colds threatened, and to use VapoRub if a cold developed. Look in your VapoRub package for story of these tests and directions for following Vicks Plan in your own home.

Ecstatic Statistics

Every once in a while the faith of the modern age in statistics seems to go a little too far. A case in point is the recent survey on marital bliss by two professors from Cornell and Chicago Universities. Their conclusions, after interviewing 526 couples over a period of seven years, seem to leave Cupid astride a graph in a rather sorry predicament.

Courtships of less than three months or more than five years give 30 per cent less chance of happiness than those which last between three and five years. When the courtship extends from three months to a year it still gives promise of 20 per cent less bliss than the magical three to five years of "adjustment." Adding up all the professors' findings, one concludes that if a minister or a chemical engineer marries a school teacher whom he has known four years or so and they afterwards handle their finances well, they will be deliriously happy. The outlook for the rest of humanity is proportionately less attractive.

The results of these calculations are terrifying to contemplate. They are bound to start a bull market on such statistically desirable mates as ministers, chemical engineers and school teachers. Little girls, instead of growing up dreaming of Prince Charming, will look forward to meeting a chemical engineer with a predetermined combination of traits. No longer will the young man come wooing with sweet nothings. Instead he will attempt to sweep the object of his affection off her feet with numbers and graphs; that is, after the proper three or four years.

And if it comes to statistics, the professors' forthcoming book itself will probably be inaccurate a few days after publication. Prospective couples certainly must have had a better chance to be happy when they thought they were starting out with a 100 per cent sure thing. Now that they will know just exactly what the odds are, how can they escape disillusionment? If the book goes into a second edition, corrections will probably have to be made accordingly. So the whole thing appears a vicious circle that does little credit to the science of measuring the strength of love.

Not Costs, But Rackets

Members of the building trades departments of the A. F. of L. evidently misunderstand the purpose of the investigation being conducted by the Department of Justice into the building industry.

In a resolution adopted at the recent annual convention in Cincinnati, delegates from the building trades unions called for a disclosure of the "whole truth" about the cost checks on building activity. "History reveals," it was asserted, "that for purely political reasons investigations of the past have resulted in a summarizing of the effects of labor costs and a complete disregard for and total elimination of concrete description of costs other than wages paid for labor."

This emphasis on cost factors betrays a complete misconception of the character and purpose of the inquiry launched by the Department of Justice. That agency is seeking for evidence of combinations in restraints of trade which warrant prosecution under the anti-trust laws.

Since illegal restraints of trade usually result in high production costs, the department is naturally concerned about the causes of high prices. There is no reason to suppose, however, that it is animated by any anti-labor bias. Unions are to be investigated only insofar as labor racketeering, in conjunction with illegal restraints imposed by building trades employers, interferes with free enterprise in the industry.

In an address a few days ago before the Oregon Bar Association, Assistant Attorney General Thurman W. Arnold, head of the Anti-trust Division, indicated very clearly the chief purpose of the Department's investigation and the secondary character of its interest in construction costs.

"I believe," he said, "that in the long run the operation of free and independent private enterprise can effectively solve our housing problems if we remove the obstructions which now block the channels of trade in that industry. In such a situation it becomes the clear duty of the Anti-trust Division to investigate and attack all of the restraints which hamper experimental organization and experimental techniques in building. That such restraints are a major factor in the situation is shown by the behavior of building prices. They do not react as competitive prices should."

A Chinese Wall

Debate on the neutrality bill, which got off to a flying start yesterday, will seem somewhat unrealistic until it begins to emphasize the extraordinary extent to which this pending legislation proposes to build a Chinese wall around the American coast.

In the heated discussion of the arms embargo the magnitude of this contemplated sacrifice of long-established rights and principles has been almost lost to sight. Yet, from the traditional American viewpoint, it would seem that the restrictions planned for our shipping, trade and travel are the most vital part of the bill. Certainly they should be closely examined before they are made an irrevocable part of national policy.

These restrictions fall into five broad categories, which cumulatively go far beyond anything in the existing law.

They would (1) bar the ports of all belligerent nations to American shipping; (2) empower the President to define combat areas through which no American ship, and no American citizen on a foreign ship, would be allowed to travel; (3) prohibit Americans from traveling on ships of a belligerent nation; (4) prevent the "export or transport" to a belligerent nation of "any articles or materials" until "all right, title and interest therein shall have been transferred" to a foreign agency or national; (5) terminate all loans or credits to belligerent nationals excepting only 90-day, non-renewable credits for "normal peacetime commercial transactions."

It is doubtful whether the country yet realizes the extent to which this self-denying ordinance would cut America off from the outside world, including other countries of the Western Hemisphere. For while the bill makes an effort to exempt Latin-American nations from its more rigorous provisions, it is not certain that these exemptions would stand up under the operation of the law.

Yesterday, for instance, it was announced that a German commerce raider had sunk a British merchant ship off the Brazilian coast. If the legislation now under discussion is passed in its present wording, similar incidents might force the President to stop all American trade or travel with Brazil. In like fashion, the proposed legislation might operate to interrupt our commerce with Cuba, Venezuela, Mexico and all other Latin-American countries.

Nobody, as yet, has really attempted to assess the cost or implications of such a policy. All the emphasis so far has been on the desirability of keeping America at peace. Since there is little or no argument on this score, it would seem reasonable for Congress to take that much for granted, and to set itself the practical task of scrutinizing in sober detail the full commercial and economic import of the bill before it.

To withdraw all but our coastwise trade from the Atlantic Ocean; to divert the shipment of imports as well as exports to foreign bottoms, to impede our normal commerce with Canada and to isolate ourselves from Latin America would indeed prove a strange and pitifully short-sighted way in which to confront the world crisis. Its contribution to peace would be hypothetical. Its injury to vital national interests would be all too apparent.

Senator Pittman yesterday reiterated the undeniable truth that the present arms embargo favors Germany. Senator Borah as logically pointed out that to stop favoring the Nazi-Communist combination now would be deeply resented in Berlin.

There is no exception to be taken to the remarks of either protagonist on this score. Those who favor the Germans, consciously or unconsciously, want to see the arms embargo kept. Those who favor the British and French, consciously or unconsciously, want to see it removed. But those who favor the United States alone should realize that the pending legislation affects much more than the arms embargo, on which most of the propaganda has been exerted. Fortunately, there is still time for Senators to examine the bill from the viewpoint of purely national self-interest.

Over-Expanded

The United States has not, of course, shifted to a war economy, but the Government has acquired a larger pay roll than it had at the peak of the World War. Civil Service Commission records show that the war-time personnel of the executive branch reached a peak on November 11, 1918, of 917,760 employes. Two months ago a new peak of 927,887 employes in the executive branch had been attained.

In the year before the Armistice of 1918, the number of Government employes was almost doubled. About four years were required, however, to shrink the executive department back to what was then considered its normal size. Only slight fluctuations in Government personnel followed until the advent of the Roosevelt Administration. Since then the rise has been steady and rapid. If the present trend continues, it will not be long before the regular departments and independent agencies have twice as many employes as they did at the low point following the war.

For the most part, the larger number of Government employes reflects more extensive services rendered to the public. Dozens of new agencies have been established, and the activities of many old ones have been expanded.

If the Government continues to extend its regulatory and control functions, a still larger army of public servants will be needed.

Probably a good case can be made out for personnel increases in most instances. Yet the fact remains that even in peace time governmental agencies as a whole are in an over-expanded condition. As in the case of the national debt, a reasonable explanation can be offered as to why these additional obligations have been incurred. Nevertheless, such vast expansion of our debt, and of our governmental machinery in time of peace, leaves us in a weaker position to meet any emergency that may arise.

Judicial Evolution

Decisions of great importance have been handed down during every term of the Supreme Court in recent years. So it would be rash to predict that the term which opened yesterday will prove extraordinary. Yet at least two factors tend to give the 1939-40 session of the court a special significance.

In any period of upheaval and rapid change the courts inevitably assume a more vital role in our system of government. The European war may place unusual strains upon the American political system. Times of emergency encourage disregard of civil rights. It is not impossible that the Supreme Court during the present and subsequent terms may be called upon to uphold the Bill of Rights under trying circumstances.

Perhaps even more important may be the trend of decisions dealing with the limits of governmental power. Under the influence of its recently appointed members, the court has unmistakably departed from precedent in several directions. In some instances it has gone back to re-examine constitutional principles that had become encrusted with precedent and obiter dicta. In other cases it appears to have magnified specific grants of power in the Constitution, such as the commerce clause, at the expense of other and equally valid constitutional provisions.

The court deserves only applause for its tendency to appeal from mere precedent to the organic law itself. In general, the practice of judges in building upon the decisions of their predecessors is sound. Over a long period of time, however, that custom may lead the courts into by-paths running far beyond the restrictions of the Constitution. A case in point is the long line of decisions forbidding the taxation of Federal employes by the States and of State employes by the Federal Government. All that the Constitution itself requires, as the court has now made plain, is that taxation shall not be used by either government to jeopardize the legitimate functions of the other.

Shifts in constitutional doctrine effected by this process are unquestionably salutary. They justify the term "constitutional renaissance." It is the tendency of the court to let down the bars against unlimited Federal power, with little regard for the provision in which ungranted powers are reserved to the States and the people, that is giving concern to many thoughtful citizens.

Some of the decisions rendered during the last term led Frank J. Hogan, president of the American Bar Association in 1938-39, to conclude that the court "has brought within the ambit of Federal control most if not all activities of the Nation." That view may be extreme. But the court certainly appears to have interpreted the interstate commerce clause as permitting the control of agricultural and industrial production. In upholding the quota system of restricting farm output, moreover, the court accepted the fiction that the AAA regulates marketing rather than the planting of crops on the farm. The court was content to note that the act did "not purport to control production."

Decisions of this sort naturally lead to the conclusion that all bars to the exercise of Federal power in the field of economic control are down. A few years ago a proposed constitutional amendment granting Congress power to regulate industry, agriculture and labor was frowned upon because it was believed to be too sweeping. Now it appears that much the same result has been attained through judicial whittling.

It may be that future decisions will make these potentially revolutionary changes seem much less sweeping. It may be hoped the court will correct the impression that it is willing to accept the "purport" of legislation and ignore its actual intention. But there is no doubt that the manner in which it projects newly-adopted doctrines into future decisions will profoundly affect our form of government as well as the welfare of the Nation.

Unchristian Neutrality

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: Having been asked by a number of peace organizations to join in opposing the program for repeal of the neutrality act, I am taking the liberty of setting forth the reasons why I cannot oppose it.

The principles for which Hitler and Stalin stand are opposed to every Christian concept. The brutality, the mass persecution, the disrespect for human rights, the principle that the world shall be ruled by force—all these principles are of such a nature that civilization could not continue to exist if they were given universal acceptance.

When my neighbor is being attacked by a brute, it is my Christian duty to run to his aid. If I am afraid to help him, or if I am too much of an isolationist to involve myself in his troubles, he may plead with me to throw him my weapon with which he may save his own life. On what Christian theory can I refuse?

There are circumstances under which refusal to help is synonymous with cowardice or with selfishness, or both. Neutrality may be utterly unchristian when a Christian principle is at stake. With democracy so definitely challenged, and with the principles of freedom and of human rights trampled in the dust by ruthless dictators, the least we can do is to put the defenders of decency in a position where they can, on their own responsibility, avail themselves of the materials they sorely need and which we are able to supply within the strict limits of international law. It is my firm conviction that this policy involves in the long run less danger of embroiling us in a world war than would a continuance of the present law.

For these reasons I trust that Congress will follow the course which the President has charted.

WILBUR LAROE, JR.

Communists In Service

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Congressman Dies says that steps ought to be taken to eliminate some 2,600 Communists from the Government service where they hold key positions. It appears that they are to be given the opportunity to renounce their Communistic affiliations or quit their jobs.

In other words, our Government is going to say to them: "We know you are disloyal at heart to the American Government, but if you will wear a blue necktie to the office tomorrow instead of a red one we will continue to pay you a nice salary until the time comes when you feel that your party is strong enough so that you can dare switch again."

One question in which the American people are vitally interested is "How does it happen that 2,600 Communists hold key positions in our Government? How did they get the jobs in the first place?" Who was it that said: "Put none but Americans on guard?"

Prayers For Peace

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: "More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of." The war can be stopped by intelligent and fervent prayer. Are you leaving it to "the other fellow" to do your peace-praying for you? If you are, you are classed as a slacker.

Furthermore, the other fellow can no more do your praying for you than he can carry your gun for you on the field of battle. Your own personal contribution of prayer is needed, and daily, to swell the force that can conquer evil and bring peace to all mankind.

Preparation For Peace

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Prosperity came to the United States as the result of a unique opportunity—vast resources, free play for individual initiative, few restraints and restrictions, the pouring of vast sums of investment money into the country to aid in its development, sums which were paid off in export commodities. Thus wealth in the greatest volume and in the shortest period of time was accumulated.

Much of that old-time opportunity has passed out of the picture.

Prosperity does not belong to the United States as a right and inheritance, but may belong to it as a result of clear thought and sound action.

Resources continue abundant, mass production can meet competition, there is ample money with which to finance enterprise. The full implications of chemistry, science, invention have not yet been discounted. The ultimate value to human beings of the internal combustion engine, the radio, the airplane are yet to be realized. Hundreds of millions of people—all potential customers—desire modern gadgets. Millions of square miles of forest lands, now made accessible by the motor car, await use and cultivation.

But all these resulting benefits cannot be capitalized by the United States unless the people give adequate thought to the means through which they can be turned to practical account.

Hence the arbitrary need for farvisioned preparation for the peace that will follow War No. 2 some day.

Preparation for war or defense is spectacular, excites the imagination, develops vocal patriotism.

Preparation for peace, on the other hand, requires research, well directed thought, knowledge of the economic lives of many people, good judgment and statesmanship of a high order.

Congress may be relied on to prepare the country for defense.

Preparation for peace should be placed in the hands of a well-qualified group which would be charged with pointing the way to the Government, to Congress, to the businessmen and to the people generally.

WALTER PARKER.
New Orleans, La., Oct. 1.

"Real Neutrality"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Things are coming to a very serious point when the Chief Executive of 123,000,000 Americans attempts to hide his prejudices behind a slogan conveniently called "neutrality." This is exactly what our President is trying to do.

Any schoolboy can see that the sudden change of rules in the course of any game, especially if this change be in favor of the team that is temporarily behind, shows a direct tendency to favoritism. Still President Roosevelt seeks this end and, ironically enough, calls his proposition "real neutrality."

If we are to have "real neutrality," of which the President speaks, we shall have to place an embargo on all trade to belligerent nations; for anything sent to the warring nations is a help toward their end. Helping one, or both sides for that matter, certainly isn't "real neutrality." JACK RUSSEL DUNN.
Washington, Sept. 29.

Is It Our War?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The present Nation-wide discussion of our neutrality law is exposing Americans to a barrage of stereotyped nonsense, even from United States Senators. For example, nothing could be more mistaken and unpatriotic than to declare that our entry into the World War in 1917 served no good purpose. The people of Belgium and Alsace-Lorraine, yes, and the people of France as a whole, gladly and gratefully testify to the contrary. I should expect the popples of the fields of Flanders to blush a deeper red at such a discount of the valor and efficiency of the American doughboy.

Another stupid proposition is that America entered the World War to make the world safe for democracy, and instead made the world safe for communism and tyranny. I would like to ask the Senator who wasted good radio time for such silliness to tell me what kind of a world would have resulted if we had stayed out of the war. Has he any idea what kind of a treaty Germany, as a conqueror, would have forced upon Belgium, Holland, France and England?

I heard a celebrated Senator say the other evening, with an air of finality: "This is not our war!" The Levite and the publican did not consider it their affair when the poor man mentioned in the New Testament, "fell among thieves. They passed on the other side." But the Good Samaritan had a different rule of ethics. So did Gens. Kosciusko and Pulaski, of Poland, when the American colonists were fighting for freedom.

May I ask what excuse we have for passing by on the other side? Do we not know that any successful assault upon human freedom and popular government, even in distant Poland or Belgium, imperils our own Nation? Are we going to wait for Hitler and Stalin to tell us that this is as much our war as it is the war of England and France? I would regret to know of a single drop of American blood being spilled because of the Hitler-Stalin combination, but we shall not keep out of war by weakly declaring our purpose not to fight no matter what happens.

HYACINTHE RINGROSE.
Washington, Oct. 1.

Embargo

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: With Russia, now teamed up with Germany, and Italy in its usual role on the sidelines, ready to jump to either side if it seems advantageous, it is vitally necessary that the United States should interpose no obstacle to the free flow of all commerce with England, France and Canada. If I were a Canadian I should feel betrayed and should bitterly resent the narrow and selfish policy of the United States if we should retain the embargo against Canada and her allies. It seems to me that our peaceful and neighborly relations of 125 years are now being endangered.

The embargo act was a piece of unneutral legislation passed under the emotional stress of resentment against Italy's attack on Ethiopia and the attack of Japan on China and specifically designed against aggressor nations. It should now be repealed, for it is equally an unneutral act against our closest friends. It favors Germany materially, as the frantic German barrage of propaganda indicates.

We should take no chances that we might be forced single-handed to carry on a war against Germany, Russia and Italy in the event of defeat of England and France. Furthermore, by retaining the embargo we are welching on a moral obligation to help shorten the war and save thousands, possibly millions, of lives of fine youth and billions of property damage by lifting the embargo.

The Post Impressionist

Matter Of Taste

"DON'T LOOK NOW," said the young man to his dancing partner, "but when I swing you around look at the little old man with the tiny red flower in his buttonhole, sitting behind our table. The poor guy is making his entire meal of milk toast."

"I swear, that's the saddest sight I ever beheld," said the girl when she glimpsed the old man. "Imagine coming to a resort hotel with food like this and being able to eat only milk toast. What fun do you suppose there is in life when you get that old and your stomach that delicate."

The young man said, "Speaking of food, the waiter just brought our capon. It'll get cold."

The couple stopped dancing and returned to their table.

Poor devils, the old man was thinking, is that all there is in life for young people nowadays? Dancing at a resort hotel and capon assuming the rank of a gastronomic delight?

Lord, when he was that age—they must be 27 or 28—the food he'd eaten then!

There was that stuffed sturgeon with that incredible sauce at Voronoff's place, two days by sled from St. Petersburg. That was following the wolf hunt when the kill was made with a knife after the beast leapt practically into the saddle.

Then there was the bouillabaisse at that sailor's place in Marseilles after they came back from the salvaging trip. Silly idea, the whole thing. Preposterous, really, ever to have been accepted as a sailor on the boat and to put in three months just to be on hand when the safe was finally lifted. But Hennings was willing to pay, and pay plenty, for someone to give him first news of whether the papers were still legible and as it happened that villainous crew of sailors turned out to be pretty good scouts. They lied like troopers at the trial and swore the mate was drunk and had hallucinations that he was knocked down the companionway. The bouillabaisse, as a matter of fact, was by the way of being a victory dinner after the acquittal. He could taste it yet and that must have been 50 years ago.

That dinner backstage with Emily Charlotte was almost as long ago. Delmonico's prepared it and the head waiter served it himself. Pressed duck and they really made champagne in those days. At first he was just another Stage Door Johnny. It was filling the elevator in her hotel with her favorite flower, violets, that really made the impression.

Probably her only beau that ever knew her real name. Most everyone else—who was lucky enough—called her Lillie. Lillie Langtry.

Capon and ballroom dancing. He was only 31 when he saw the Dance for Allah's Eyes. What's-his-name, that fellow who wrote a whole book about it? Said he was the only non-Arabian ever to have seen it. Stupid liar. It was a dance, though! And followed with portions of kid sauteed in mare's milk and all those chilled fruits—never did know the names of all of them and never saw half of the varieties again.

That was the year before he got into Addis Adowa the hard way, to see Menelik. Funny the Italians never knew the part the French played at Adowa. Menelik gave him the purple ceremonial rhinoceros hide shield as a token.

The dinner at his palace wasn't in it, though, compared to the one staged for him by the army intelligence staff back in Paris. Private room at Marguery's. And then the scoundrels sprung the test they give the St. Cyr graduates. Three magnums of champagne, 30 kilometers to ride all in three hours. Passed it, too, by thunder, but he always blushed when he saw one of the girls.

Next day, at the formal presentation, the memory of the pheasant Marengo was still fresh on his tongue. It was even now. The flavor of that, and of everything else.

"A golf game early tomorrow would be about the nicest thing I could think of," the girl was saying.

The old man was smiling a little to himself, his fingers gently touching the rosette of the Legion of Honor in his buttonhole.

ALFRED FRIENDLY.

The Metric System

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a part of our national program of preparedness, and the move to expand our world trade, it is anticipated by many that the United States will adopt the decimal metric weights and measures for general use. When Congress next takes up consideration of this advance, positive action is expected because of the demands of the times.

Hitherto, obstructionists have always fought bitterly to kill in committee any metric action. The great basic strength of this issue in Congress was shown the one and only time it was allowed to come up for a general vote. In the House of Representatives, the Stone metric bill successfully passed two of the necessary three readings, but after a dispute on rules of order it was recommitted to the Committee on Coinage, Weights and Measures on request of its author, with expectation of a later vote, indefinitely delayed. The metric legislation was never defeated in a general vote in Congress.

Such metric legislation has won overwhelming victories in more than 40 of the great parliaments of the world.

All commercial nations, except the United States and the British Commonwealths, are now on the metric basis in merchandising, and British units are largely different from ours. Lack of world standardization is to the United States a grave national peril. It is isolation far from splendid. AUBREY DRURY.
San Francisco, Sept. 27.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Strange Unanimity

FOR ONCE, ANYWAY, the American people seem to be agreed, but only in a weird, acrimonious way. The whole Nation is determined to keep out of the Hitler-Stalin revival of the World War, but the agreement on that common purpose is as bitter as any conflict could be, short of actual violence. It is a strange irreconcilable unanimity, more French than American.

The President and the Administration want to keep out of war and Mr. Borah and the other isolationists feel the same way. Henry Ford, Col. Lindbergh, Fritz Kuhn, the anti-American Bund, the American Legion, the Republicans, the Communists, the capitalists, Earl Browder, Mr. Hearst, Father Coughlin, Norman Thomas, and, to make it unanimous, George Spelvin, the average American, all oppose American participation.

Yet there is furious strife over the reasons why individuals and elements of the Nation belong to this united front, and neighbors who stand elbow to elbow along the line question not only the motives, but the sincerity of those arrayed beside them.

Mr. Browder has abandoned the old Communist united front against Fascism which strove to arouse in American workmen and college students a spirit that would drive the country to war not on Russia's side but as Russia's substitute. Now that Soviet Russia and Nazi Germany have acknowledged their common character and purpose, he is opposed to any American military action against Hitler. Thus, the Communist League Against War and Fascism becomes a league against war against Fascism, which is a difference vastly greater than the substitution of one little word for another.

Browder Accuses 3 Of Hidden Purposes

BUT MR. BROWDER accuses Lindbergh, Hearst and Coughlin of a hidden purpose of driving the country to war on Britain's side, which is a queer and confusing charge, considering the records of these men. The only doubt of Lindbergh's motives that has been raised in debate arises from his personal relations with some German leaders and with those British who were described, perhaps too glibly, as pro-Germans. If Lindbergh is friendly to these people and their point of view surely he would not desire that the United States fight against them. Mr. Hearst has always been anti-British. His news service was expelled from Britain in the first World War for lack of sympathy with the Allied cause, at considerable cost to him. Years later, the French asked him to be absent from their country, a faux pas which can hardly be said to have endeared France to him. Father Coughlin is not easily understood on any issue, but he comes of rebel Irish, anti-British stock and his late bishop was actively anti-British the last time.

Mr. Ford, at times, has been accused of Fascist tendencies, and he was once, for a spell, actively anti-Semitic. But if this evidence be valued 100 per cent that would place him alongside Mr. Browder on the American united front against war, Mr. Browder himself being now a Fascist, or worse, a Nazi, by political marriage.

Frits Kuhn Wants Germany Protected

MR. KUHN HAS obvious reasons which need not be examined for hidden ideas. It is his plain, simple mission to prevent, if he can, the enlistment of another strong nation against his fatherland. He doesn't have to make any pretense. Mr. Thomas has high, virtuous motives which he expresses in orations of great beauty, and the capitalists realize that if we should go to war capitalism would be unable to pay the cost and would crash into Bolshevism or Nazism at the end. As capitalists they can't be Communists or Nazis, so they would seem to have clean hands.

Another element, too mixed or confused for classification, which opposes American involvement is that glamorous but not necessarily large group of Communists and bleeding hearts who squirted scorn over the pallid and irresolute Mr. Chamberlain after Munich. In his surrender to Hitler that time Mr. Chamberlain was said to have betrayed democracy. But now that he has made the dreadful decision to fight, the same persons who berated him then accuse him of fighting an imperialistic war.

The Communists are particularly rude in their taunt of imperialism, but only since Stalin joined Hitler and the war in defense of Poland became, indirectly, a war against Russia, too.

Mr. Spelvin on his part, and I dare say Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Borah, the Legion and the Terre Haute Rotary Club, have reasons for their stand in this queer American united front which need no examination and permit of no doubt. They just wanted to keep out of war.

Unions Back Shut-in Teaching

The District of Columbia Women's Trade Union League, "representing 22,000 union members," is backing a congressional appropriation to provide a permanent teaching staff for shut-in children and continuation of the WPA project for that purpose in 1939-40.

Copies of a resolution passed at a recent meeting were sent to the District Commissioners, the Board of Education, District WPA officials, Col. Francis Harrington, WPA Commissioner; chairmen of the House and Senate District committees and to unions affiliated with the league.

Partial Text, Neutrality Talks

Situation Is Called Greatest Threat to World in All History

Here is a partial text of Senator Key Pittman's address to the Senate on neutrality:

In my opinion no such grave situation has threatened the world in all history. The rapidly multiplying tragic events in the world today are appalling and arouse a feeling of fear and distrust in the minds of all people. The inconceivable developments in the European controversy strike with palsying force on the minds of even the most astute statesmen, confusing reason and delaying action.

There is no cause for fear now that we will be drawn into the brutal and widening conflict, and yet, we are the representatives of a peace-loving, democratic people, have no right to refuse to take into consideration that such war, or a war that develops out of it, may not some day be brought to the gateway of our own country.

There would seem to be, fortunately, no sufficient grounds for fear of being drawn into this war as we were forced into the World War, so long as we conform to the admitted precepts of international law and prevent our citizens from subjecting themselves to destruction in the mad war raging in Europe.

No Rights Abandoned

It is not the destruction of property that arouses a war spirit in our people. It is the illegal destruction of the lives of our citizens. It is what we conceive to be the illegal destruction of the lives of our citizens. This was the cause asserted by Woodrow Wilson in his war message to Congress before our entry into the World War . . . .

In 1937 our Government determined to suspend some of its rights under international law, during widespread war. We placed restrictions upon our citizens and upon their property, and upon American vessels, such as had never before been enacted in this country or any other country in the world.

We did not abandon those rights under international law, we simply suspended them during the war rather than to fight for them, reserving the right, however, to demand reparation after the war for any illegal acts committed against our citizens or their property. We placed an embargo on the export to belligerent powers of certain things that we defined as arms, ammunition and implements of war. . . .

Embargo List Restricted

The embargo list . . . purports to include instruments of war, and yet it does not include oil that propels the battleship and the submarine, or gasoline that makes it possible for the airship to fly; it does not include cotton from which gun cotton, one of the highest explosives, is made; it does not include copper or copper tubing, out of which the shells for guns are made; it does not include scrap-iron, steel, iron, lead, zinc, or any other raw material used in the manufacture of those things in the list of arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

And yet we know from the contraband lists of Great Britain and Germany that all of these materials not contained in such embargo list will be seized or destroyed by belligerent powers if they believe that such material is moving to their enemy. And is there any doubt that if Germany, under its contention that it can not safely rise to the surface and search and seize contraband on a merchant vessel, will eventually pursue exactly the same policy as it pursued in March, 1917? . . .

May Hurt Merchant Marine

In my opinion, this is the most important legislation that has ever been proposed to Congress or ever enacted into law for the purpose of keeping us out of a European war. If our vessels cannot carry on commerce with belligerents and the belligerent powers know it, there will be little excuse, if any, for the destruction of American vessels on the high seas with the inevitable loss of the lives of our seamen. Certainly the peace-loving Senators who oppose the proposed substitute are in favor of such mandatory legislation. . . .

I fully realize that such provision may be injurious to some extent to our merchant marine. I fully realize the value of the merchant marine to the United States, not only in time of peace but in time of war. I doubt, however, if our merchant marine will be seriously injured by such prohibition . . .

There is another provision in the proposed legislation that is a subject of some controversy, not only in the Senate but throughout the country. I refer to section 7 of the proposed substitute joint resolution, entitled "Financial Tranactions." . . .

90-Day Notes Held Cash

(Editor's note: This section permits the President to authorize belligerent governments to make purchases on short term commercial credits, maturing within 90 days and not renewable. In case of default, a belligerent would be required to pay cash thereafter until it had paid for its credit purchases.)

I am informed that drafts and checks payable 90 days after date are in accordance with the usual practices with regard to export trade and are considered as cash payments . . .

It must be understood that the provision added by the Committee on Foreign Relations to existing law is a mandatory limitation upon the President of the United States. He is not compelled to permit any extension of credit to a belligerent government with regard to any transaction. He will undoubtedly be extremely cautious in permitting any such extension of credit . . .

The proposed legislation has imposed many stringent restrictions upon our citizens, upon their property, and their commerce. Restrictions have been imposed beyond those ever imposed by any government of the world, so far as I can ascertain. Our citizens are compelled to make great sacrifices under these proposed laws for the purpose of protecting the lives of our citizens, and the peace of our country. We must be careful not to further obstruct or oppose our exports. . . .

Borah's Statement

Here is a partial text of Senator Borah's address to the Senate on neutrality:

When this Nation solemnly resolved and wrote into its laws that it would never again furnish arms, munitions and implements of war to any nation engaged in war, it was almost unanimously believed that . . . we had marked an epoch in the cause of peace, that we had offered a challenge to the reign of force.

When we, as a Nation, took this position and declared our policy, there was great unanimity among all our people. The Congress and the Executive and the people were practically in accord to the effect that we would close our market to all who sought arms.

We wanted to keep out, to remain aloof from the controversies, embroilments, and the wars of Europe. We had had our experience. . . .

There was another moving cause . . . it was that deep humanitarian sentiment against manufacturing and selling arms to warring nations for profit. . . .

Shall this Nation, with all its professions of peace and its Christian teachings, manufacture and sell purely for gain vast armaments fit only for the destruction of human life? . . .

Could anyone say, or believe, that peace could ever be advanced by the furnishing of arms and munitions and the instrumentalities of war upon the part of a neutral nation? . . .

Served Notice on World

We served notice upon all the nations of the world that in their future conflicts and wars, they could not, and must not, rely upon the United States to secure the instruments of warfare for the purpose of carrying on their wars. It was a pledge to our own people. . . .

And has any nation, or any government, any right to complain of any course we may take in that regard? . . .

Did the cry for repeal originate, or does it spring from, the people of this country? Did the voice of labor initiate the agitation for repeal? Did the call for a rejection of this policy come from the farm, from the pulpit, or the pew, from the homes of America, from the families of America? Did it come from the young men who are just now hoping to enter business or a chosen profession; Where did the call come from? It came from the war hounds of Europe! . . .

Repeal has become a symbol of friendship or enmity upon the part of this country as between these warring nations . . .

There was just one construction placed upon the proposed act of repeal by both belligerent groups, and that construction was, that we were entering the conflict, that we were taking sides, that we were prepared to help . . .

Calls Baruch the Author

And will cash-and-carry, pay for arms and carry them away, have any effect as to the belief, the conclusion, that the United States is taking sides in the conflict, that it is no longer neutral, that it has rejected neutrality? Protest as we may—and as doubtless we will—this construction has been placed upon the proposals by all belligerent powers. . . .

I think it is generally conceded that the author of the cash-and-carry plan was Bernard M. Baruch, that distinguished financier, known well in two continents. It was his resourceful brain that conjured up the idea that we could get money out of war without getting hurt. He declared that cash-and-carry was not neutrality, that it was clearly unneutrality . . .

Cash! In speaking of cash, I make no point at this time of the fact that we are extending credit for 90 days. We are basing our whole theory upon the proposition we will get cash from nations now in the most deplorable, economic and financial condition, nations which, though the war is only six weeks gone by, are already through taxation digging into the food and the necessities of life even of those already impoverished beyond description. . . .

Can't Pay War Debts

We are dealing with nations which cannot pay the interest, much less the principal, upon the debts incurred in the last war, many of which debts are now due to the American taxpayer, not in sums of millions, but of billions. . . .

Do you really expect to get a dollar out of munitions, except as that dollar is ultimately furnished by the people of the United States? . . .

The munition maker will get his compensation. He will make his profits. Business will have to move. But where will the buyer, the nation buying the stuff, get the money to pay the munitions maker? He will, in my opinion, in the last analysis, get it where he got the money to pay for the war material purchased during the World War, and that is from the American taxpayer. . . .

The argument is advanced by the supporters of the cash-and-carry plan that it gives security and affords protection to our own people. The contention is that before the munitions are shipped, the American manufacturer, having parted with his title, the title to the same having passed to the shipper—the manufacturer will no longer invite attack from the belligerents. . . .

"It's Not Our War"

It does not seem to be quite so simple. If a manufacturing plant, we will say, is located at Wilmington, Del., engaged in shipping munitions to Great Britain, will the antagonists, belligerents, await until title has passed? . . .

We will be regarded by the belligerent as an enemy, as in the war. They will treat us as such. To them the transfer of title will be a sham, a pretense. Instead of affording protection, it will invite attention. . . .

These arms are being sent because it is claimed that powerful forces which foster and feed upon racial hatred and religious persecution must be checked. Well, let us accept this thesis. . . . Suppose they say to us, as they said once before: "We need your young men." What will be our answer?

If you believe what is now being preached throughout this country, and indirectly supported by this measure, you will send munitions without pay and you will send your boys back to the slaughter pens of Europe. . . .

All the debates in the world, in parliament, or on the stump, will have no effect as against the passion, the deep-seated war spirit of those who are on the field. . . .

Let's stay out of this war! It is not our war!

Neutrality Debate

By Mark Sullivan

Apt To Last Long

As the Senate debate on neutrality began, there was much speculation about its probable length. For many reasons, it will last longer than is expected. It will spread out in ways not now anticipated. The final form of the law may be surprisingly different from the present proposal.

As yet the Senators themselves, and the country, are merely groping on the edge of a field, of which they do not realize the size and complexity. Permitting credit to belligerents, just now dwelt upon as if it were the main question, is actually a mere detail, certain to sink into relative unimportance. Quite possibly, as the debate goes on, we may make a greatly changed approach to the whole question. This is likely if the debate is thorough, if it goes to the bottom. And though the question is not now fully understood, the mood of the Senate and the country about its seriousness will make the debate thorough and prolonged.

War Compels Changed Attitude

President Roosevelt, in his message to Congress, said he was sorry Congress had passed the existing neutrality law four years ago, and sorry he had signed it. Yet what has happened to give us more light now? It is merely that the law has come into practical application, through the arising of war between Britain and Germany. As the law works under this set of facts, Mr. Roosevelt and many others see it as unsatisfactory. It might be equally unsatisfactory under any other set of facts bringing it into application.

We fail to realize that what we have attempted is something unprecedented and revolutionary, something no other nation ever attempted, something new in the world. What we are now "up against" is the question whether our experiment is workable at all. The question will be answered by the Senate debate, and by experience.

From time immemorial, the term "neutrality law" has meant international law. It has had to do with the rights of neutrals, especially the right of neutrals to sell goods to warring nations, and send the goods in the neutrals' own ships. Neutral rights were always something neutrals insisted upon.

Infinite Complexities Are Not Recognized

Now, however, we—in the interest of what we believe to be international altruism and also what we believe to be our own safely—abandon our neutral rights. Far from insisting on the right of our citizens to sell and to ship, we forbid them, and inflict criminal penalties on them if they attempt it. This is the principle underlying both the existing law and the variation Mr. Roosevelt proposes. Under both, it is a crime for an American citizen to sell a toothbrush to a citizen of Germany, or of Britain or France, except for cash, and it is an unqualified crime for an American ship to carry that toothbrush to its destination.

This may be a better way to promote both safety for America and peace for the world. All that is said here is that sooner or later the Senate debate must recognize that it is a reversal of international law and of immemorial custom. It is pioneering, and pioneering usually involves trial and error. If the new way is kept, writing the law so as to make it workable will consume much time. The practical difficulties, the infinite complexities, are not even faintly recognized. Shall we forbid our ships to go to distant possessions of Britain and France on the Pacific, half the world away from the scene of war? To write a statute flexible enough, containing enough provisos, exceptions and qualifications, to care for the contingencies foreseen and unforseen, will take much time.

Congress Should Leave Details to President

A SHORT-CUT way would be for Congress merely to declare the broad principle, and leave the details of application to the President and his appointees. But Congress is definitely reluctant to leave great discretion to the President.

An early draft of the new neutrality measure went in one detail so far as almost to invade the constitutional prerogative of the Executive in foreign relations. This feeling of Congress is not the ordinary reaching out to extend prerogative that is often practiced by both legislative and executive branches of Government.

The attitude of Congress in the present case reflects a real feeling that our actions and policies in the face of war should have a broad basis of collective judgment, and that the President will be helped by the participation of Congress.

But the disposition not to give great discretion to the Executive, to write minute provisions into the law, adds to the probability that the work of arriving at a neutrality policy will keep Congress in Washington a considerable time.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Road To American Security

THE BILL WHICH is now before the Senate calls for such a sweeping abandonment of American rights, such a far-reaching renunciation of principles for which this country has contended for more than a century, that only the most compelling reasons can justify it.

It is no trifling matter for a great maritime nation like the United States to take its ships off the seas wherever and whenever a foreign government decides to create a state of war. But there is, I believe, a compelling reason why in this particular war so radical a departure from the historic American policy is justified and necessary. The compelling reason is that in the world as it is today, the United States cannot afford to become a participant in the European war. And it is because the bill before Congress goes as far as it is possible to go by legislation now in making participation unlikely and unnecessary that I think it ought to be enacted, and that every effort should be made to see that the practical administration of the law is made workable and effective.

United States Is In Strategical Position

THE REAL REASON for adopting a policy of nonparticipation in the European war is not a pharisaical indifference to the issues of the war, nor unconcern as to the outcome, nor panicky fear and weakness. The real reason is that to participate in this war as we did in 1917 would jeopardize profoundly the security of the United States and of the whole Western Hemisphere.

Those who talk so much about American participation, either because they dread it or because they desire it, have not, I submit, realized the underlying and controlling strategical position in which this country finds itself. Once they realize the actual position, the people who are frightened that we shall be seduced by our emotions into participating will understand why we cannot participate, and those who are inspired by their sympathies will understand why we must not participate.

It May Be Noted That Fleet Is Facing Asia

THE TRUE POSITION becomes clear at once when we note that the American fleet is in the Pacific Ocean, and that it is facing not Europe but Asia. In 1917 this was not the case. In 1917 all the Far Eastern powers, Japan, China, Russia, Great Britain, France and the United States were allies, and the American fleet was, therefore, in the Atlantic available for use in the European war. Today, Japan is at war with China, is pursuing an aggressive policy as against Western interests, our own included, and Russia is pursuing a policy which as yet is entirely unpredictable. There is, I think, no division of opinion in this country that under the circumstances the American Navy must remain on guard in the Pacific.

From this basic fact two great consequences follow: One is that we cannot repeat the intervention of 1917 even if we wished to repeat it; it is unthinkable that this Nation or any other could send an army across 3,000 miles of ocean without a navy to protect its communications and assure its safe return. No one in his senses would put an American army in Europe, relying upon the British navy to convoy it and supply it and bring it back. For, what would be the position of that army if Britain were defeated and compelled to surrender its fleet to Germany as Germany, when defeated in 1918, had to surrender its fleet to Britain? The American army would be lost and would have to be ransomed at some terrible price.

The second consequence of our having to keep the American Navy on guard in the Pacific is that the defeat of the British and French, and the subsequent surrender of their fleets and of their strategic bases in the Atlantic, would find us without adequate naval defense in the Atlantic Ocean. We should, of course, have to build "another navy." But that is easier said than done; it is doubtful whether another navy could be constructed in much less than 10 years. Therefore it is a matter of great importance to us that the British navy shall neither be destroyed nor surrendered.

Bill Insulates U. S. Against Participation

THE VIRTUE OF the measure now before the Senate is that, as far as legislation can now achieve it, the bill insulates this country against participation in the European war on the one hand, and against the consequences of an allied defeat on the other hand. There has been some discussion as to what the bill should be called. It might well be called "a bill to keep Americans 3,000 miles from the war and to keep the war 3,000 miles from America." Nothing that anyone else has proposed comes anywhere near accomplishing this result. For, if we leave the law as it is, with an embargo on arms but with no embargo on shipping, American ships will be involved in the European war zone; and if we do not repeal the arms embargo, we shall either lengthen the war or contribute to an allied defeat. This bill steers between the Scylla of American involvement and the Charybdis of an allied defeat, and in that narrow passage between these two perils, lies the road to American security.

Majority Of People Want To Stay Out

IT IS OFTEN ALLEGED these days that there is a conflict between our hearts and our heads, our sentiments and vital interests. I do not think so. The great majority of the people manifestly want to stay out of the war and manifestly they want the Allies to win. They are right on both counts. The popular instinct in the question is sound. A cold-blooded examination of the position shows, I am convinced, that the sentiments of the people reflect correctly the real interests of the country. This bill with its stringent embargo on shipping to replace the embargo on arms and its greatly strengthened embargo on finance, expresses in law the real interest and the real sentiment of the country.

For what, if we look behind the legal language, is the practical substance of this bill? It starts with the fact that the war is 3,000 miles away on the other side of the Atlantic; and that the only European nation with which we could conceivably become involved in war is Germany. Between the United States and Germany are 3,000 miles of salt water. We have no land frontier with Germany.

This being the situation, the problem is how to prevent hostile collisions that might lead to war between Germans and Americans? The bill does this, first by withdrawing American citizens, American property, American ships, and American financial interests from the theater of war. Can anyone think of a more obvious way of staying clear of a war than to withdraw from the theater of war? If there is nothing American in the fighting zones of Europe which the Germans can shoot at and that we have to defend, then as long as the war remains a European war, how in the name of common sense, are Germany and America going to collide?

Clearly, the new embargoes in this bill on shipping and the tightening of the existing embargo on finance achieve a physical separation which is as wide as the ocean between America and this war. And then by repealing the existing embargo on finished arms, the bill makes it much more certain that the war will remain 3,000 miles in Europe, safely contained behind the barrier of the French and British armies and navies. For if that barrier were broken, the war would no longer be localized in Europe but would spread into the Atlantic Ocean, and we should be much nearer to it than we are today.

So the bill in essence pulls American interests out of the zone of the European war and pushes the European war away from this hemisphere. On the one hand, we withdraw our own interests from the scene of the fighting, and, on the other, we keep the fighting away from the scene of our vital interests. We keep ourselves on this side of the ocean and the war on the other side of the ocean.

SHORT OF MOVING to another planet, I cannot imagine how this country could use the ocean which separates it from Europe more effectively than in this bill. And since we have a hemisphere to protect, and the wide Pacific to watch, it is our true policy to keep the European war at a safe distance.

'Hollywood Cavalcade' Is A Smash—So We Hear!

Technicolor Film Pageant Is Almost Previewed; Ann Sheridan to Greet Red-Headed Boosters; This, That and the Other About the Theater

THE WHOLE TROUBLE seems to be that they neglected to put hours enough in certain of the days.

Take yesterday, for example. What with that Variety Club luncheon-meeting to lay plans for the "Cavalcade of Thrills," a scant two weeks away; Sam Wheeler's preview screening of "Hoolywood Cavalcade," at the Circle Theater at 2 p. m.; a set of late afternoon deadlines, in perfect working order; the opening of the National, with the Lunts, in "The Taming of the Shrew," and another set of early morning deadlines that seemed to be functioning all right, too, Monday, October 2, should have contained at least 30 hours. It somehow didn't work out that way on my Elgin. Maybe I should trade it in for a Cadillac, or something. Anyhow, that's how it was.

BELL

Perhaps the bitterest tears are splattering over the Underwood because we missed that "Hollywood Cavalcade" preview. Of all the recent crop, that is the picture we are sorriest to have muffed, on account of because we are a sucker for that nostalgic stuff and "Hollywood Cavalcade" seems to be the current item that ain't got nothing else but.

"Hollywood Cavalcade," to begin at the beguine, is Darryl F. Zanuck's Technicolor production that goes 'way back to when in the history of the cinema and then gradually brings the evolution of the motion picture down to date in a spectacular splash of multicolored modern magnificence. It is the "way back to when" part that we probably would have been most interested in, since our memory easily goes back that far, too—what there is left of it.

Alice Faye, Don Ameche, J. Edward Bromberg, Alan Curtis, Stuart Erwin, Donald Meek and the other principals who contribute to the panorama of Hollywood from then to now, no doubt are as excellent in their parts as they are cracked up to be, but what I particularly wanted to see was Jed Prouty, doing his remarkably faithful impersonation of the late Ford Sterling as chief of police, and Eddie Collins, Hank Mann, Heinie Conklin and Jimmy Finlayson in their original roles of Keystone Cops; Ben Turpin, doing the cross-eyed bartender; Chester Conklin, as the sheriff, and Mack Sennett, Buster Keaton and Lee Duncan playing themselves, with Rin-Tin-Tin, Jr., taking the part of his own great-grandpappy. Them was the happy days!

There no doubt would have been a bit of a bang, likewise, in watching George Givot, the eminent "Grik," impersonating an Englishman. Those who have met him know that George can work in any dialect with equal facility, including, I dare say, the Scandinavian.

Then Technicolor would have come in for more than passing attention, along with all of the recrudescences of the past. In its present perfected form, Technicolor is apt to be quite an asset to any far-flung and flamboyant film that costs something in excess of $2,000,000 to make.

Oh, well, perhaps there will be another day—with 30 hours in it.

But in the meantime, Manager Sam Wheeler, of the Twentieth Century-Fox Washington Branch Film Exchange, adds insult to injury by sending me what is obviously a fake ticket to the world premiere of "Hollywood Cavalcade," in the 4 Star Theater, Los Angeles, Calif., tomorrow night. The pasteboard, which is about the size of a 24-sheet, is priced at $10, tax exempt, and calls for seat 29, Row A, Center Section, on the orchestra floor. Sorry, Sam, but my eyes will have to have a chair farther back in the house—or you can just mail me the ten bucks!

And the end is not yet. Today at 1:30, the guys and the gals of the drayma desks are being shown "The Man in the Iron Mask," following "The Women" on the screen at Loew's Palace, and tomorrow at 2, "Honeymoon in Bali," opening Friday at the Earle. The eyes must have it—they certainly have to take it!

It was easy to guess what it was, directly the postman rang. "Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Randolph Arnall announce the marriage of their niece, Augusta Roeland, to Mr. Harry Stephen Essex, on Saturday, the ninth of September, Nineteen hundred and thirty-nine, Nyack, N. Y. At home after October fifteenth, 150 East Fiftieth street, New York." Harry Essex, of course, is known to all of Washington—or almost—as one of the better stentors of the theater, who long has trumpeted the coming to the Capital of the Gilbert Miller and other top attractions. Congratulations, best wishes and all that to an old friend.

Ann Sheridan, appearing in person at the Earle this week—or had you heard?—will greet the members of the Washington chapter of the Ann Sheridan Redhead "Oomph" Club this afternoon at 3:30 in the studios of Station WJSV, in the Earle Theater Building. It is expected that some 50 charter members of the organization formed in her honor will be present to meet the star. That crowd of males out in front will not be admitted.

"The Old Dark House," 1932's super-terrific horror epic, with Charles Laughton, Boris Karloff, Raymond Massey, Melvyn Douglas, Gloria Stuart and Lillian Bond, will be continued a second week at the Little Theater, where it has stood them out on the sidewalk even in all that rain. The picture ran five weeks in Baltimore. It's Roadsidey qualities bid fair to compile a similar record on Ninth street. There are as many unintentional laughs in it as there are deliberate thrills. When, as and if it does come off, it will be succeeded by "Heart of Paris," first Washington showing.

Seats will be on sale at the National Theater box-office Thursday morning for the engagement of Helen Hayes and Philip Merivale in "Ladies and Gentlemen," the new play by Charles MacArthur and Ben Hecht, which Gilbert Milleris bringing to town for one week immediately prior to its opening in the Martin Beck Theater, New York. In view of a huge advance mail order demand for seats, it exceedingly behooves those desiring the best locations to be there early.

Washington has witnessed many performances of Will Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew," but never viewed the full pattern of the play, in all its sturdy texture, until last night.

The Alfred Lunt-Lynn Fontanne richly and hilariously embellished acting version of the durable old farce defies tradition and transforms every conventional conception of the robustious comedy into a quick conviction that here, for the first time in the memory of this generation, the piece is played as it should be played—with ribald, riotous and rowdy overtones, exuberance, movement, color and noisy enthusiasm.

Comic "prop" horses, midgets, acrobats and bizarre costumes contribute to the multiplication of the provocative qualities with which "The Shrew" may be endowed by artists who realize that Shakespeare can be given an invigorating "shot in the arm"—and our anatomical references may be a little garbled—without desecration of the text or anything but an immensely effective glorification of the spirit in which it was written.

In the hands of the Lunts and their associate players, the Bard becomes a modern author, with quickened comedy, clarified purposes and an enormous nudge in the ribs and tickling of the funny-bone for those who feel that laughter is something to be enjoyed extravagantly and enormously at a time when there is too little of it loose in the world.

Presentation Is Unique

The two parts in which "The Taming of the Shrew" is performed are presented in unique fashion. They are enacted less for the audience than for the edification of Mr. Christopher Sly, a very drunken gentleman, who is elevated to a lordship, garbed in costly raiment and ensconced upon a downy couch in a stage box, from which he views the proceedings with all of the hiccoughy enthusiasms of a roustabout very much in his cups. Katherine appears first as a huntress, armed with a blunderbuss of unerring aim. Petruchio's appearance upon the scene is a little more formal, but the chivalrous composure of a diffident young man from Verona, seeking wife and a dowry on an otherwise aimless jaunts to Padua, is completely and convulsingly lost, once he gets Katherine in his hair and a bullwhip in his hand.

The contagion of tumultuous action, accelerated comedy and ridiculous by-play spreads swiftly to Bianca and her suitors, their elders, their retainers and all who have any part in a delirious tangle of mistaken identities, devious designs and clashing cross-purposes. Yet, as I have said, the integrity of the basic Shakespeare never is violated. It is unfailingly the stalwart body of the play, merely festooned with gay decorations to give it new contours and magnified luster.

As in Shakespeare's Time

Essential scene divisions are indicated during the progress of parts one and two by deft utilization of drop curtains and movable scenery, contrived, one imagines, much after the manner of play presentation in Shakespeare's own time. The device affords just one more fillip to an evening filled with alarums, commotions and surprises. The stationary settings are massive and imposing.

The cast of characters, necessarily, is of such length as to extend far beyond the personnel of the acting ensemble which so long has been prominent in the successive productions in which Mr. Lunt and Miss Fontanne have apeared in recent seasons. Many of them, however, still remain among the most reliable and most welcome of the principals. They assure the rounded excellence of a performance that deserved the ovation it was acorded last evening by an audience that overflowed the seating capacity of the theater.

Mr. Lunt's Petruchio and Miss Fontanne's Katherine go to war with a fine balance of armament. Each gives and asks no quarter when the battle rages most violently. Neither is either one deficient in those methods of bodily attack which will prove most strategically efficacious at the moment. Their portrayals are marked by a high quality of physical endurance and a conspicuous ability to lend Mr. Shakespeare's lines all of the pungency he evidently intended to write into them.

Comedy Runs Riot

It is a well-nigh inspired bit of low comedy that Richard Whorf offers as his share of the evening's hilarity in the role of Christopher Sly, the groggy gentleman who has been so magnificently dubbed "the bum in the box." Scarcely less comic, although in entirely different vein, are Sydney Greenstreet, whose admirable playing has been an integral part of so many of the Lunts' plays, as Baptista; S. Thomas Gomez, as Grumio, and Charles Bowden's brief "bit," as the tailor. Alan Hewitt, Norman Stuart, Francis Compton, Byron McGrath, Albert Carroll, Edith King, Fay Baker and all of the others whose names appear in the small type paragraph preceding these midnight comments labor diligently and delightfully to make "The Shrew" memorable.

"The Taming of the Shrew" is offered by the Theater Guild and John C. Wilson not only as the National's inaugural attraction for the new season of 1939-40, but also as the first of the season's subscription plays. The subscribers already have received their money's worth for the year.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Oct. 2 (INS).—Straight from headquarters, Herbert Wilcox has had word that England does not want English stars, directors or producers now making pictures in Hollywood to return for war duty until they are called. Wilcox, with his star, Anna Neagle, was all ready to fly home on the clipper when he was told it would be foolish for him to leave.

LOUELLA PARSONS

He was a pilot during the World War and is on the recall list. "Carry on with your jobs" was the way the London war office expressed it, "and we will let you know if you are needed. Right now there are more volunteers than are required."

With film production in England at a standstill, they are in need of pictures and are wholeheartedly in favor of having their British sons continue production over here. Miss Neagle and Wilcox are just back from attending 14 premiers of "Nurse Edith Cavell," and will make another film in Hollywood just as soon as they decide on a story. However, Wilcox insists "Marie Lloyd," the yarn about the English musical hall queen, will not be it.

I learned a bookful about the Capitol page boys after talking with Charles Rogers. His interest is the play, "Senate Page Boys," he has just bought from Albert Benham and Jeanne Spencer, which he will put on the screen just as soon as Congress convenes in January. There are 50 of these lads, all of whom are selected by Senators or Representatives. They go to school, they play baseball, they have a club and many of them finally achieve West Point. Charles will shoot his movie in Washington and will try to give the world a picture of these lads who get their education first-hand from the lawmakers of the Nation.

Bette Davis is lingering in New England long past the time alloted her for her vacation. That's because she is so worn out she feels she must have more rest before starting a picture. Hal Wallis said today that he did not believe Bette's unwillingness to return now would lead to a feud, for she will be permitted as long a vacation as she feels necessary. Jack Warner, now in the East, will see his star and have a talk with her. She has stated that she does not want to make as many pictures in 1940 as she did in 1939. The academy winner has already made four this year—"Juarez," "The Old Maid," "Dark Victory" and "The Private Lives of Elizabeth and Essex." She wants to do only two a year while the studio is asking for four.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: The Wayne Morris baby will be born right here in Hollywood, since the prospective papa has been called for "Brother Rat's Baby;" Bette Davis became an aunt over the week-end when her sister, Barbara, welcomed a daughter. The young lady's name is Ruth Favor Pelgram in honor of her grandmother.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 2.—So certain Bette Davis will get another oscar for her "Elizabeth" I've already sent my check paying off my bet. The actress hasn't been born who can take it away from her this year. I don't know any woman who would be willing to make herself as hideous as she did. And when you see her, I think you'll agree that she's not only the greatest actress on the screen, but could share honors with Helen Hayes' "Victoria." And the beauty of Errol Flynn left me limp. He'll hate me for that "beauty"—but what else can you call it? Not since Valentino have we had a more exciting personality. Donald Crisp gave his usual brilliant performance. I went hook, line and sinker for "Elizabeth and Essex."

HOPPER

Which reminds me of a Warner joke. Seems when the Queen Mary was on her way back and in the middle of the Atlantic, a German U boat stuck its nose up and hailed it, megaphoned to the captain and said: "Send Harry Warner to the rail." Harry was sent for, went and said: "I haven't done anything. It's my brother Jack who makes all those pictures."

Well, brother Jack can take a bow for this one!

What a party Bob Hope gave Judy Garland and her gang at Victor Hugo's. Too bad public didn't know about it. There was a million dollars' worth of entertainment, free. With Judy & Mickey Rooney, singing and doing his impersonations of Barrymore, Gable and Eleanor Roosevelt answering Franklin. That right after son Jimmy had left the cafe. Jackie Cooper played the drums. Mrs. Hope sang beautifully. My, that girl has talent. Shirley Ross joined in. Casini, who's here to play "The Life of Rudolph Valentino," sang "Begin the Beguine." Jerry Colona buil "The Road to Mandalay" on one note. Dolores Hope told me their vacation in England was spent going from one Music Hall to another, gathering new jokes. Nothing stronger than coffee was served at the table. If grown-ups wanted to drink they went to the bar. Only kid missing was Deanna Durbin, she would have loved it. Mickey showed me the watch given him by the Mayor of Kansas City, also Mr. Mayer's watch on top of a billfold. On his p. a. tour he did 45 shows a week. Our grown-ups could learn from those kids, their enthusiasm for each other and respect for each other's talents. Incidentally, it's nice to know in this day of salary cuts, Hope's was upped voluntarily by Paramount.

You should have seen Connie Bennett's nine-year-old son Peter take first prize from grown-ups in the five-gaited horseman class at Pomona. Connie's eyes gleamed with pride

Do you remember Virginia Lee Corbin, one of our kid stars? She's playing nurse to Sandy in "The Little Accident" at Universal.

When I walked on "The Fighting Sixty-ninth" and saw my Bill drilling in an army uniform with a complete Army unit, I had a peculiar sensation. Few mothers can so vividly see shadows of events that may come. Bill soldiered by day; put on a Tux and worked in "Invisible Stripes" for Lloyd Bacon at night. Which is a lot better than going to war!

Which reminds me "Johnny Get Your Gun," by Dalton Trumbo, is a book everyone should read—at least everyone wants to keep America out of war. And it was sent me by Cardie Lombard.

A letter from Pinegrove, N. J., with a plea that "Cavalcade" starring Clive Brook be released at this time. They believe it would help keep us out of war, and be good box office. I believe they're right.

And did you know Leslie Howard, when he acts as producer and actor, takes less money than when he just acts? He worked up to a down payment!

Timely Rainstorm

The almost incredible luck with the weather which followed the "Northwest Passage" company on location, held good again when rain clouds blew over the Idaho mountains, and in the next fifteen minutes produced sufficient of a shower for the only rain sequence of the picture.

Longest Scene

Mickey Rooney and Charles Winninger are claiming the longest scene since the balcony episode in "Romeo and Juliet." They play it in "Babes In Arms" and it runs nearly four minutes.

Diligent Searcher

In his quest for rarities to add to his pewter collection, Nelson Eddy revealed on the set of "Balalaika" that he had visited two thousand antique shops in the last two years.

National DeGoofey Week

MRS. HENRIETTA DEGOOFEY, famous reformer, has stepped into the breach to do something about the national week situation.

At her press conference yesterday, the intrepid president of the Do Something About It League announced her intention to work out a complete schedule of national weeks— and to enforce that schedule.

"It has just come to my attention," said Mrs. DeGoofey, "that while there are 31 days in October, there are only three national weeks for the month —a National Doughnut Week, a National Spaghetti Week and a National Candy Week.

Mrs. DeGoofey

But that leaves one week and three days unaccounted for. Now what on earth are we to do with ourselves during that period? Imagine the 130,000,000 population of this country running amuck because it has no national week to observe!

"Why don't we have a National Cocktail Appetizer Week?" suggested a political columnist.

"Why not a "Scotch and Soda Week?" asked a police reporter.

What Shall We Do With Our Time?

"Those are both excellent suggestions," said Mrs. DeGoofey, and I will take them under consideration. However, finding a fourth national week for October is not my only problem. I have discovered there are still a few weeks during the year that have not been given a national designation —weeks in which the public is completely at sea as to what to eat, wear or do.

"Now if I do not take speedy action, I fear some self-appointed killjoy will rise up and turn these weeks into all sorts of terrible occasions. I can even visualize a National Spinach Week, a National Carrot Week, a National Buttermilk Week, or even a National Be Good Week.

"So, as quickly as possible I want to set aside a National Fried Chicken Week, a National Chocolate Pie Week, a National Hot Biscuit With Lots of Butter Week, a National Watermelon Week, a National Second Helping Week, a National Eat What You Please Week—in a fact a lot of generally enjoyable weeks.

"Will your weeks all be devoted to eating activities, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a poetry editor.

"No indeed," was the reply. "I hope to make life a little easier for women by having a National No Company Week, a National Go Without Your Girdle Week, a National Keep the Newspapers Off the Floor Week, and perhaps a National Gossip Week.

"Won't the men get any breaks?" asked the editor of a man's page.

Tell-a-Joke Week
A Break for Men

"Yes, several. I am going to have a National Tell-a-Joke Week in which men may devote their entire time to telling and retelling their oldest anecdotes, with women being compelled by law to listen attentively. I also plan a Make a National Speech Week in which everybody, I hope, including Congressmen, will get all their oratory out of their systems. I am also thinking of ordaining a National Pay No Bills Week, a National Borrow a Dollar Week and a National Answer No Questions Week. If the last idea is carried out I think we should in justice to wives have a National No-Kidding About Blondes Week.

"However, I am waiting for suggestions from the public before working out my complete schedule of weeks. Incidentally, you might be interested to know that many of my friends are urging me to set aside a week in honor of myself—a week that would of course be devoted entirely to reform, a week in which the entire Nation could go on one vast orgy of reforming everything and everybody. However, as you know, I am very much averse to personal publicity of any kind and would prefer that my own name not be used in this connection."

"Have you any other hot news to announce today, Mrs. DeGoofey?" asked a former city editor.

"Nothing, except that I have a new hat. If you should care to send photographers, I will be in my office the rest of the day. And don't forget that the 'G' in 'Goofey' is capitalized."

First Nighter in 'Cover Up' Gown

It's "good theater" to start off the new season of plays in a gown that is noticed, but not conspicuous. The new covered up look is the smartest prescription this fall for dining out and then a first night. This two-piece gown shown was inspired by the dandyfied lines of French Revolution costumes. The fabric of the royal blue jacket and frock is padova, a soft woolen finished acetate rayon, which drapes as smoothly as duvetine. The gown minus the back-peplumed jacket has generous shoulder straps and a pearl clip.

Pep-Up Parties With Ballads

So get out the songbooks and start with an old-time favorite, "Wait for the Wagon." Here's one verse:

Do you believe my Phillie dear,
Old Mike with all his wealth
Can make you half so happy
As I with youth and health?
We'll have a little farmhouse—
A horse, a pig, a cow,
And you will mind the dairy,
While I go out to plow.

A good-by to a fickle love is "New River Train." So sing it sassy-like:

Leavin' on the New River train—
Ridin' far away, honey.
And I'm goin' to stay,
Leavin' on the New River train.

And right heartily you join in "Come Along to the Big Barn Dance," your foot keepin' time!

There'll be good singing and a lot of fun,
There'll be big doin's for ev'ryone,
Come along, come along, come along to the Big Barn Dance.

Woman Who Is Almost Tearfully Self-Conscious In Company Asks How to Acquire Poise

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am wondering if you could help me overcome self consciousness. It is handicapping me in my work and making my social life miserable. I don't enjoy meeting people or visiting close friends, for I am so ill at ease that I can't look at anyone and I know I look as if I were going to cry. I am 25 years old and have been married five years. I certainly have every reason to be happy, except that this wretched self-consciousness keeps me from enjoying the things that I have.

My work at the office requires constant concentration and I'm always busy, but even so, I seem always to have my problem and the question of how to remedy it is never absent from my mind. I have forced myself to accept invitations, thinking each time that I would make myself be at ease. But I only succeed in embarrassing myself and making others uncomfortable. I shall appreciate any advice you can give me. Thank you. Sincerely, MARY.

DEAR MARY: In discussing the phenomenon of acute self-consciousness with a psychologist once, I was told that it very often stems from an unconscious sense of shame or guilt; and that this psychological distress is most frequently found to be connected with some frightening or mortifying childhood experience that has faded entirely from conscious memory.

Should this be true—and it seems a logical theory—then it follows that the cure of self-consciousness consists in bringing that soul-searing but forgotten experience to the surface of the mind, to be re-examined in the light of intelligent adult understanding. This enables the sufferer to see not only the root source of his perpetual uneasiness, but also to recognize how absurdly without foundation his self-condemnation has been. This psychotherapeutic device of recovery through recollection is the equivalent of having an abcessed tooth extracted by a dentist, and has an equivalent effect in relieving the patient's suffering.

In my opinion, therefore, yours is a problem for a psychologist, psychiatrist or psycho-analyst, since trained insight and a careful review of your emotional history undoubtedly will be required to locate the specific sore spot. The Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene (telephone ADams 1033) can supply you a list of names of such specialists.

Girl Is Disliked By Beau's Mother

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a girl of 17 and last spring I met a very nice boy of 19 (he doesn't drink or smoke) and we were very much attracted to each other and started going together. We would go to the movies once a week, or would visit each other's home. The evenings we spent at his home, I noticed his mother seemed to resent me in some way, and although our homes are in sight of each other, she nearly always balked at his spending the evening at our house.

Now, seemingly, she has broken up our friendship. He had a date with me recently and stayed only a few minutes, saying his mother wanted him to take her out; and, further, that she didn't like him to keep company with me. When I asked why she had taken this attitude, he answered that "she gave several reasons," but he didn't say what they were. I am sure that he likes me very much and I would rather go with him than any other boy I know.

All this has greatly hurt and puzzled me, as I have always been kind and courteous to his mother and family. We belong to the same church as his family and I can't think of anything I have ever said or done that could reflect upon my character. I have lots of friends, both old and young, and am healthy, pretty and attractive. All this boy's brothers are married and have homes of their own.

Do you suppose his mother is just jealous and possessive? How can I best cope with the situation, supposing he wishes to renew our friendship? Should I ask his mother for an explanation, or should I break completely with him? I shall appreciate an early reply. BEWILDERED.

Possessive Female Parent Is Mean Adversary

DEAR BEWILDERED: One doesn't have to be a seer to see that this mother is up in arms against the possibility of losing her baby boy. Her marked coolness toward you amounts to a compliment, since it means that she recognizes, fears and resents your wholesome powers of attraction, plus your general suitability to be a sweetheart to her son.

The jealously possessive mother who is determined to keep her son as her own bachelor beau usually cloaks her intent by conspicuously throwing him into the company of girls he doesn't admire, while relentlessly weeding out all such girls as appeal to him. And this is the sort of mother-son imbroglio in which the latter type of girl should never get mixed up. If she does, she is bound to be badly bruised before she finally fights her way clear again.

No constructive purpose would be served in your asking this mother for an explanation of her inimical attitude. Such an effort would only result in a painfully embarrassing interview, for you—and whatever explanations, if any, she might give would be more politic than truthful. However, if the boy shows a disposition to continue the friendship, welcome him to your home and accept his invitations to the movies, but do not cross his mother's threshold again. Since she neither invites nor encourages your presence there, it is rather inconsiderate of you to inflict yourself upon her.

Obviously, both you and the boy will henceforth be struggling against formidable odds in trying to develop and maintain an enjoyable relationship, based on the mutual attraction which exists. Frankly, I doubt that it can be done. And the only reason I do not suggest that you "break completely with him" (as you suggest), is because I feel that he is not to blame for, and should not be summarily punished for, his mother's emotionalism and undue interference in his private life.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes.

New York, Oct. 2.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—One of the town's prettiest and most popular postdebs is known to fame and the roto sections as "Wendy" Iglehart, daughter of a famous polo clan on Long Island. She began life as Aida M. E. B. Iglehart, but was relieved of that burden when her pop saw "Peter Pan" and gave her "Wendy." She is now reported to be engaged to a boy named Hugo Rutherford, and when the parson asks "Wilt thou, Aida—the girl probably won't answer up, not recalling any Aida of her acquaintance.

One of the smoothest girl columnists in our town is undoubtedly Dorothy Kilgallen, who does Broadway for a local paper, and does it very smartly. Now that she is betrothed to a handsome actor named Richard Kollmer, one of her colleagues reports that Texas Mary Martin, "whose heart was supposed to belong to Daddy" is carrying a smouldering torch. If true, the other town lads must be envying young Richard, acceptable to two such pippins as Dotty and Mary.

NEXT TO Errol Flynn and Lili Damita, I've always thought the handsomest young couple in show business was Lief Erickson and Frances Farmer. Now the story goes on Broadway that the marital teaming is on its way to a complete bust, which is a howling shame, for they are two nice kids, in addition to being so inspiring to the eye.

Mrs. Frances Kolodin asked the law for freedom from her spouse Louis. When the law asked why, she said that they had a dust-up at the dinner table one night and that Louis not only threw the spaghetti at her, but the meatballs too. The sympathetic law thought this was enough reason to recommend that Frances be allowed out.

Can't fool me about the opening of the music season here. When I hear that "Sylvia Seelig, 12-year-old pianist, will play at Town Hall Friday night," I know the annual battle of sharps and flats is on, and no fooling!

WITH THE shopping season busting wide open (the stores hope), it is a pet sport at this time of year to choose colors for things. Some stylists dictate, other shops poll the help. One big store did the latter this week, and the employes voted overwhelmingly that black-with-red will be the shopping public's pet this fall. Browns, also ran. Conservative, but very good—no, yes?

Dowager's Hump Is Problem Women of All Ages Face

By Ida Jean Kain.

YOU MIGHT suppose a dowager's hump was something reserved exclusively for the dowagers—like diamond stomachers! But they seem to be the special anathema of all women, regardless of age or position, who make a habit of holding their heads forward. And that takes in business women, artists, writers and housewives who knit one, purl two!

The d. h. seems to appear suddenly and without warning. There's no premonitory pain. You just happen to look in the mirror sidewise, and there it is, perched brazenly on the nape of your neck. Having annexed this obnoxious little pincushion of fat, you are likely to regard it as a fixture. But you can get rid of it if you make up your mind to.

Even Sophie Kerr Had One

Sophie Kerr, the delightful fiction writer—who looks like a fiction heroine herself—claims she used to have one of those humps. And she seems to think that banishing it was one of the outstanding triumphs of that particular year! How did she manage it? Why, with exercise, of course! And here's the one that did the trick for her.

Lie on the back on the bed, head hanging over the edge, and raise the head very slowly until it is in a straight line with the spine. Hold this position for a second and slowly lower. Do the exercise three times, later six, and make the movements of the neck very slow and deliberate.

Another good exercise for erasing the hump is to lie face downward on the floor, arms stretched straight out from the shoulders. Raise the head and arms backward as high as possible. Hold for a second, return to floor, rest, and repeat slowly. Six times will be enough of that!

And here's a third one for you: Lie on the back on the floor. Now, arch the upper part of the back so that the weight is resting on the back of the head and the hips. Hold, relax. Repeat three times and gradually increase to six.

All of these exercises should be taken very slowly. No good will come of dashing through them! But if you will do all three exercises as they should be done, every day, you may be able to banish that hump in three weeks.

Along with your exercises, improve your head carriage. Learn to hold your head squarely on your shoulders and don't ever let your head jut forward. Always keep the chin at right angles—just level. In stretching up to stand as tall as possible include the neck muscles so there won't be any slack for a dowager's hump.

BEFORE closing OCT. 31st
If you intend to see the greatest of all World's Fairs at a minimum cost, now is the time to complete your plans. October 31—the closing date—is too close for indecision. If the fear of high prices is keeping you home, ease your mind on that point, too. Facts, carefully checked, have proved that in New York, as in any other large city, you can spend as little or as much as you wish.
At the New York World's Fair charges are moderate in spite of gossip to the contrary. You can see 1,500 exhibits . . . educational, dramatic, spectacular, informative . . . without paying a penny. For those who must economize there are special combination tickets and reduced week-end rates for admission to the Fair. Ask those who have visited the World's Fair. They will say, "Don't miss it." But remember it closes Oct. 31.
Consult your local travel agent regarding the reduced Railroad and Pullman rates effective September 15
When you come to New York, it will cost you no more to stop at the Plaza than at any other hotel of equal standing. The Plaza is preferred by those who are satisfied with nothing but the best.

Notables Attend Theater For 'Taming of the Shrew'

Carriage Trade Arrives in Droves to See Lunt and Fontanne in Shakespearian Play; Dinners, Supper Parties Enliven Calendar

By Hope Ridings Miller.

Capitalites by the dozens saw a shrew tamed to perfection last night as Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne romped through their roles in one of Shakespeare's most popular comedies. The combination of the Immortal Bard, the Lunts and the season's opening of the National Theater brought out the carriage trade in droves.

Inveterate first-nighters, Theater Guild subscribers, social lights and official notables in general were on hand for "The Taming of the Shrew," which drew almost as big an audience as the convening of Congress.

Not as much a dress parade as typical openings in war-free years, last night's audience had its share of sweeping gowns and top hats. Several dinners preceded the theater, and a few supper parties enlivened the calendar afterward.

Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Smith, who recently returned from Newport and are back in their Mayflower apartment for the season, entertained at dinner at the Mayflower, bringing their party on to the theater. The Solicitor General and Mrs. Robert H. Jackson, the Undersecretary of Commerce and Mrs. Edward J. Noble, the Assistant Attorney General and Mrs. Samuel Clark, and Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Sturgis were in the company.

A report rippled through the crowd that Mrs. Edward Beale McLean and her famous Hope diamond were on hand for the event. I didn't see either Mrs. McLean or Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer, who was said to be with her. Anyway, the box in which Mrs. McLean usually sits was taken up by part of the play itself, which included a clever off-stage part that proved particularly effective.

Senator Lodge Seen in Crowd

Very much a center of attention was Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who was seated on one of the front rows and who, on the way to the lobby between acts, stopped several times to chat with friends. Mrs. Alice Longworth, who arrived alone, was another surrounded during intermission.

Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, wearing a long black velvet wrap, slipped into her seat a fraction of a second before the curtain went up. Near her was Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins. In the same section I spotted Dr. and Mrs. William A. Morgan, accompanied by the latter's mother, Mrs. Ogilvie Shumate; Maj. Horace Simth, Mr. and Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt, and Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Evans, jr.

Many Notables Seen in Crowd

The lobby was a moving mass of social celebrities during intermission. Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, trimly turned out in a black ensemble, was seen threading her way through the crowd. Sir Wilmott and Lady Lewis gathered a group of friends about them for a chat. Lady Lewis, incidentally, looked like a fashion picture in a sweeping black frock with a bustle effect, set off with a smart red jacket that contrasted nicely with her silver hair.

Dr. and Mrs. Breckinridge Bayne were glimpsed in the throng; also, Mrs. Blair Bannister, Miss Annabel Matthews, Lady Bradford Leslie, Mr. and Mrs. Drew Pearson, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Knowlton, Mrs. Celeste Crosby Miller, chatting with a group that included Mr. and Mrs. William Lacy and Mrs. William T. Mann.

Still others seen: Mr. and Mrs. Wade H. Ellis, Mr. and Mrs. T. Sims Lee, Mrs. George T. Summerlin, jr., Mrs. Albert Niblack, who arrived with Mrs. Randolph Miner, and Mrs. Ernest Walker—to mention but a few of the scores of prominent men and women who were part of the capacity audience. A gala "first night" if there ever was one, the event brought back some of the glitter and glamour of other Capital seasons.

Ice Club Issues Cards to Prospective Members, Emphasizing Its Long Waiting List

THE ICE CLUB of Washington has issued cards to several hundred prospective members for its 1939-40 season. Its success last year exceeded even the fondest hopes of the organizers, with the result that now one is told to get one's answer in quickly as there are many clamoring for admission. Everybody in the Capital has, it seems, gone skating-mad.

McKee Dunn will serve as this year's chairman, replacing James Clement Dunn, of the State Department (no relation). Edward Burling, jr., is vice chairman and the other officers are John C. Borton, treasurer, and Mrs. Creighton Peet, one of the best skaters in the club, secretary.

Members of the board of governors include Mrs. Dean Acheson, Mrs. Borton, Mrs. Burling, Miss Frances Carter, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Clephane, G. Howland Chase, Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Melville Grosvenor, Clarence D. Herreshoff, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Hiss, Creighton Peet, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sanger, John Sternhagen, Cuthbert Train, Mrs. Thacher Winslow and Mrs. Nathan C. Wyeth.

Sessions will begin at the Chevy Chase Ice Palace November 5, and continue through March 31. Members will meet Monday and Wednesday afternoons and Sunday mornings, as last year.

THE LINER MANHATTAN, which docked at New York Saturday positively bulging with passengers, brought back several Washingtonians, among them Countess Guy de Baillet Latour and John Stonborough. They are fascinating their friends at cocktail time with tales of the difficulties of getting out of Europe. Mr. Stonborough reports that the corridors of the American Embassy in Paris were swarming with agitated school teachers trying to get passage before their money runs out, whereas the idle rich sit peacefully and calmly in the Ritz bar rather enjoying all the excitement and seemingly in no hurry to get home.

Miss Eleanor Connolly went to New York to meet the Manhattan and a quartet who will be her house guests here, the Misses Alice and Margaret Moran, of Chicago, and Katherine and Alice Albro, of Buffalo. The Morans were spending the summer as usual at their little chateau, La Tourelle, Rochefort-en-Yvelines, when they were advised to cancel their sailing on the Aquitania and return by an American ship. Their chauffeur, who already had been mobilized, performed his last service for them when he drove them to Bordeaux, where they waited a week for the Manhattan.

They report that even sending a cable from abroad is accomplished under the most harrowing difficulties. The message must first be approved by our embassy, second by the prefecture of police, and then taken to a special postoffice, every procedure requiring standing in line for several hours, so that it's an entire day's work to send one cable.

Miss Connolly, who is president of the Alumnae Association of Georgetown Visitation Convent, spent the entire summer in a tour of the country visiting former pupils. At Santa Barbara, Calif., she was the guest of Mrs. Osborne Craig and Mrs. L. Townsend Burden, of New York, joined the reunion.

NORA MAGEE and William Breese have selected October 19 as the date of their wedding. The ceremony will take place at Montreal and will be a very quiet one. After a honeymoon the couple will return to Washington to make their home.

SO MANY people seem to be in transit from one residence to another in this month of shifting addresses that one has to speak days ahead for a moving van. The Eliot Wadsworths have settled on the home of Clarence Aspinwall on Kalorama Circle, a house which Senator Guffey and his sisters occupied a few years ago . . . Mrs. Peter Augustus Jay will come to town after the forthcoming wedding of her daughter, Susan, and has leased the John White house at the corner of Nineteenth and R streets. Mrs. White is a sister of J. Pierrepont Moffat, of the State Department.

NEWS NOTES: Mme. Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, has gone to New York for a week . . . Mrs. Frank West canceled a scheduled trip to Mexico and is back in Washington after a summer in San Francisco. Her daughter, Mrs. Hugh Cumming, jr., has also returned after a visit with her mother . . . Back from Bar Harbor for the season is Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney . . . Charles Gaines is taking a late vacation and has gone to Jacksonville, Fla., for ten days.

Harter, Mrs. F. D. Van Valin, Mrs. Lyman B. Swormstedt, Mrs. Scott Smith, Mrs. M. J. Simmons and Mrs. E. T. Brown.

Duffus Couple Back in Capital

Mr. and Mrs. Carlton Duffus are back in Washington after spending the week-end with Mervyn LeRoy, Hollywood producer, and Mrs. LeRoy, at White Sulphur Springs, Va.

The week-end was unusually gay, owing to two polo matches between the Fauquier-Loudoun team, of Warrenton, and the 110th Field Artillery four, of Pikesville, Md. Members of the Greenbrier Polo Club were hosts at a julep party on Sunday in the peacock room of the Greenbrier, honoring the visiting teams. Among those who attended were Maj. Gen. John L. Hines, former chief of staff, and Mrs. Hines; Mr. and Mrs. Irving L. Camp, jr., Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Moulton and Miss Elizabeth F. Reid, of Washington. Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Hines, former residents of the Capital, now make their home at White Sulphur.

Playing with the Warrenton team were Charles Cushman, Hubert Phipps, Harris Bucklin and Richard Kirkpatrick. On the Army side were Lieut. Walter Brook, Maj. Amos Koontz, Lieut. George Storer and Capt. George F. Foote.

Lilita Dawson Returns From Adirondacks

Miss Lilita Dawson, daughter of Mrs. Thomas Dawson, returned recently from Schroon Lake in the Adirondacks where she was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. George Welwood Murray for a month.

En route to Washington, Miss Dawson stopped off in New York where she spent a week visiting the World's Fair.

Mrs. Donaldson Writes Book on Faraway Lands

'Passport to Adventure' Title of Volume Due On Stands in a Week

Nobody travels more than an Army officer's wife, so it's not surprising to hear that Mrs. T. Q. Donaldson, widow of Maj. Gen. Donaldson, is about to publish a book on far-away lands. Titled "Passport to Adventure," it is due on the stands in about a week.

A former Washington resident, Mrs. Donaldson is the daughter of the late Dr. John O. Willson, former president of Lander College, South Carolina. Affectionately known to her friends as "Mrs. T. Q.," she has distinguished herself as a sportswoman, her favorite activities being tennis, golf, riding and shooting. She has won several golf tournaments and has qualified as a marksman on the Army range. She is a devoted advocate of flying and has made many flights, the most recent being over Victoria Falls and the Island of Guinea while on a world cruise.

Mrs. Donaldson, whose elder son, Capt. T. Q. Donaldson, now is stationed at Fort Myer, has filled her new travel book with interesting illustrations.

The S. G. Learys Touring South

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gordon Leary are motoring through the Southern States on their honeymoon following their wedding September 29. They will make their home in Occoquan, Va.

The bride is the former Miss Katherine Frances McCandless, daughter of Mrs. William J. McCandless, of this city. Mr. Leary is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Leary, of Occoquan, Va.

The ceremony took place at the summer home of Mr. Leary, Sunset Lodge, on Belmont Bay, with the Rev. Ernest A. de Bordenave officiating. The bride wore a costume suit of gray wool with red accessories.

Mr. and Mrs. Sydney L. Manson, jr., of Alexandria, Va., brother-in-law and sister of the bridegroom, were the only attendants.

Mr. Leary was graduated from the University of Virginia and is a member of the Theta Delta Chi Fraternity.

The Hugh Grants To Sail for U. S. From Italy Oct. 15

Planning to sail from Italy on October 15, the United States Minister to Albania and Mrs. Hugh Grant will visit Washington shortly after their arrival on these shores.

The Grants left Albania the middle of last month and met their daughter, Miss Louise Grant, a student at the Sorbonne in Paris. From there they proceeded to Rome where they are awaiting passage on an America-bound ship.

Before leaving Albania the Minister and Mrs. Grant gave a large farewell party at the United States Legation in Tirana prior to the closing of all legations there.

Castles Return From Hot Springs

With the colder weather, many Washington residents who have been lingering on at summer resorts are returning home. Among them are Mr. and Mrs. William R. Castle, who got back last night after a long sojourn at Hot Springs, Va.

A recent arrival at the mountain resort is Clarence Hewes, who is making a leisurely trip to his home in New Orleans. Also at Hot Springs are Mrs. Ingalls Sard, Mr. and Mrs. William Littauer, and Mr. and Mrs. William Doeller, the latter two couples from the Virginia hunt country.

Rep. Sumner Demands Strict U. S. Neutrality

Illinois Member of Congress Advises League of Republican Women That America Should Collect War Debts

The Post Club Editor.

Strict neutrality is the United States' surest means of contributing to world peace and perpetuating democracy, Representative Jessie Sumner, of Illinois, told the League of Republican Women yesterday. Addressing the opening meeting of the organization at the Mayflower Hotel, she pointed to America's experience in the World War and warned against "becoming an arsenal for belligerents."

"It's time, I think," said Representative Sumner, "that we serve notice upon the belligerents that we will not participate in this war. That we intend to preserve all the neutral rights relinquished since 1914. That in the future, as before 1914, we will—at the end of the war—present a bill for every damage to our neutral rights and insist upon payment. That if any nation wants to borrow from Uncle Shylock, it can first make its credit good by tendering to us territory equivalent in value to its war debts."

REP. SUMNER

Mrs. Howard S. LeRoy, second vice president, presided in the absence of Mrs. Edward E. Gann, who is in Kansas. She accepted for the league the gift of an electric clock, presented by Cooper Rhodes, president of the Young Republicans of the District, for the headquarters, 1301 Seventeenth street.

C. C. Cappell, manager of the orchestra, also talked briefly and announced plans for student concerts this season, for which the schools will give music credits, allowing pupils to attend in school hours. The concerts will be given at each of five schools, Woodrow Wilson, Roosevelt, Western, McKinley, Eastern and Anacostia, one in Montgomery County and possibly one in Arlington County, Mrs. Miriam B. The women received instructions and supplies from Miss Hughes.

Discussion of traffic and zoning problems, election of officers, and Red Cross Roll Call talks featured last night's meetings of citizens associations.

Progressive Citizens Association of Georgetown last night discussed the requests laid before the Commissioners last month by its executive committee, including a health center for Georgetown, repaving of sidewalks, completion of the grounds around the new Georgetown branch of the Public Library, a Government comfort station in the shopping district, improvements to the Georgetown and Montrose playgrounds.

A larger police force, increased personnel for Gallinger Hospital, new Wilson Teachers College and vocational school for boys, and a home for the treatment of alcoholism.

Takoma Park (D.C.)

A resolution to carry on its fight against proposed abandonment of the Butternut street car line, or substitution of an adequate bus service, was adopted by the Citizens Association of Takoma Park, D. C.

The resolution authorized the public utilities committee, headed by Bruce E. Anderson, to appear at a hearing on the issue at the District Building October 30 to oppose the Capital Transit Co.'s petition for abandonment. The committee also was instructed to work out a program for improved service in the area.

The organization voted to oppose a petition to the zoning commission for rezoning of a square bounded by Fifth, Sixth, Underwood and Tuckerman streets into 40-foot lots. A semirestricted area classification.

Forest Hills

A widespread program to "preserve the Forest Hills residential section" was initiated at a meeting of the Forest Hills Citizens Association last night.

Members voted to request the Board of Zoning Adjustment to curb construction of gasoline stations and other business establishments on Connecticut avenue.

Acting on a communication of the National Guard, the association voted to announce at its next meeting a request for volunteers in the Coast Artillery unit of the Guard.

Our Town: Petworth Really a Community Conscious Area

1. HEALTH SCHOOL—Petworth has more educational institutes than any other section of Washington. Here children are studying in the health school, Thirteenth and Allison street northwest

2. ROOSEVELT HIGH SCHOOL, just a few steps from the Health School, is attended by students, enrolled for business, academic and manual training courses. The high-columned entrance is the school's beauty spot

3. LIBRARY—Within walking distance of the health, primary, junior and senior high schools in the section is the Petworth Library, Georgia avenue and Upshur street northwest. This scene is typical after Petworth rings its 3 p. m. school bells

By Christine Sadler

In a city that seems determined to spread itself all over Virginia and Maryland, the neighborhood trying to hold its own has a tough tussle. Like the mule on the treadmill, it has to "run hard just to stand still."

Petworth, which is centered by Grant Circle and has within its boundaries the biggest group of public educational buildings in the District, has been a long time a-growing. And now it is demanding a peaceful middle age in which to enjoy its development.

By the time Petworth Branch Library was opened last January, almost everything the community had been fighting for—except playgrounds—had become realities. Since the turn of the century, civic and religious groups had been fighting to get first one street paved and then another, to get first one plot set aside for schools and then two.

Apartments Push In

But apartment houses are pushing in at the fringes, more streets are being demanded for business ventures, and all sorts of ideas are being presented for disposition of the Upshur street block on which the abandoned tuberculosis hospital stands. It is getting more difficult each year for Petworth to remain an area of homes

Since Petworth residents like their community and have no desire to be forced "out into the suburbs" against their wishes, they are remaining organized. Their Citizens' Association of 1,300 members is the second largest in the District. Their Women's Club this year celebrated its silver anniversary, stronger and more civic-minded than ever. Their Home and School Association, their churches, and numerous other groups are geared for trigger action when the "threat of invasion" is breathed.

Community Conscious

No Washington section has more community consciousness, nor works harder to keep it. Petworth is distinctively Petworth. Other sections might work to get a big piece of statuary for the circles in their neighborhood, for instance; but Petworth has worked to keep statuary out of Grant Circle—preferring cedar of Lebanon.

In the immediate vicinity of the Petworth Branch Library at Georgia avenue and Upshur street northwest, are Roosevelt High School, with more than 2,000 students; Macfarland Junior High School, with more than 1,200 students; the Health School, which serves the entire city, and Dennison Vocational School for Girls, which also serves a city-wide area Powell Elementary School, not far away, is a practice ground for students from Wilson Teachers College. If the last-named school should be located on the old tuberculosis hospital site, as the citizens are hoping, four educational institutions with a District-wide pull would be in one Petworth vicinity. Even without Wilson, the school and educational facilities of the library area are considered the most concentrated in any similar acreage in Washington.

The library has been a going concern since it opened, having more then 155,000 boks in circulation during the first six months. It works closely with the schools around it and yesterday afternoon had more than 100 students in learning about its facilities. Nine hundred will learn its system before the term is out and problems in library research will be worked out in co-operation with the staff.

Adult Use Grows

Miss Charlotte H. Clarke, the librarian, say adult use of the service has been commensurate with that of students. The library conference room is in use by the neighborhood practically every night in the week and landscaping of the library grounds has been a community projeet.

Petworth's history extends to "Holmeade Manor" and English nobility, but Petworth citizens usually start it with Benjamin Ogle Taylore, who bought from the Holmeade tract in 1803 and called his new estate Petworth—presumably after the town in Sussex, England. The Tayloe tract was bounded by what today are Rock Creek Church Cemetery, Soldiers' Home, Rock Creek Church road, Georgia avenue, and what were the golf links of the old Columbia Country Club.

Rock Creek Church road and the Seventh Street road—now Georgia avenue—were the principal thoroughfares. A toll gate stood near the present fire-engine house on Georgia avenue and Tayloe was the custodian.

A dozen families from Buffalo, N. Y., headed by Benjamin Summy and William Little, bought the Petworth farm in the middle 1850s and built frame houses. Summy's home, located on Summy's Hill—now generally recognized as "the Miller Place"—burned and he started thumbing catalogs for fireproof material. The first concrete house in the District resulted. To make it more distinctive, it was octagonal in design. The Miller house replaced it.

Main Growth Starts

The main development appears to have started in the late 1890s. An ad in the Equitable Almanac for 1898 advises prospective homebuilders to identify themselves with "Washington, the most beautiful city of the world."

"Buy a lot in Petworth Addition to Washington . . . It is Bound to Grow . . ." the ad continued, pointing out that "Petworth is on the line of the electric cars and about 8 minutes into town . . . It has water, sewer, and gas . . . It is laid out in exact conformity with the proper street-extension length and a number of its streets and avenues are laid in asphalt with granolithic sidewalks.

"Twenty-one attractive dwellings were erected there during the year ending in October, 1897."

Mrs. Horace J. Phelps, who devotes more than an eight-hour day to community work and is a delegate to the Federation of Citizens Associations from the Petworth Woman's Club, lists the "growing" needs of her community at present as: 1, Improvement of the old hospital site; 2, enlargement of the Petworth elementary school grounds; 3, development of a municipal playground in vicinity near Soldiers' Home.

Both she and George W. Potter, president of the Petworth Citizens Association, spoke of the close civic co-operation given by Petworth's many churches. Mrs. Phelps said most of the Petworth residents still own their own homes but that the apartment "problem has to be watched constantly."

Section Built Up

"We are in a built-up section, with room for only a few more houses at best," Potter said. "Our problem now is to watch apartment house encroachment and be alert. We have nothing against apartments, as such, and have welcomed some nice ones, but we do want to remain residential."

Talk to a man in Petworth and before the conversation is ended he tells you to be sure to talk with Mrs. So-and-So. The Woman's Club was formed in 1914, and mostly because the men had shut the feminine residents from the citizens' organization, which was organized in 1902. From this comparatively late start, the women of the neighborhood have made themselves recognized in no uncertain terms—and although the co-operation is 100 per cent today, the women still haven't forgotten has strong they became just by joining together. Nor have the men, either!

Lawyers Face Business Loss In Radio

Commissioner Payne Rigidly Interprets New FCC Rule On Intervention

Radio lawyers who for years have reaped a rich harvest in the Capital yesterday were threatened with a loss of business estimated roughly at $100,000 a year by reason of a decision rendered by George Henry Payne, of the Federal Communications Commission.

Payne, who until a year ago was a persistent critic of what he termed the "radio lobby" in Washington, announced a rigid interpretation of a new FCC rule, which would diminish substantially legal activities in radio.

Denying a petition of the Orlando Broadcasting Co., of Orlando, Fla., for leave to intervene in a case involving an application for a new station permit at Orlando, the commissioner held that an intervenor henceforth must show a vital interest in a case before he is permitted to participate in an FCC hearing.

Prior to last August, when the new rule became effective, Payne said, the commission permitted any person to intervene in a hearing if his petition disclosed a "substantial interest in the subject matter."

"This standard was so broad," he continued, "and the commission's practice under it so loose that intervention in commission hearings came to be almost a matter lying in the exclusive discretion of persons seeking to become parties to commission proceedings."

The result, he added, was that long delays occurred in many cases and "expense to both the commission and the applicants without any compensating public benefit.

"In many cases, the major function served by intervenors was to impede the progress of the hearing, increase the size of the record, confuse the issues and pile up costs to the applicant and to the commission through the introduction of cumulative evidence, unnecessary cross-examination, dilatory motions, requests for oral argument, and other devices designed to prevent expeditious disposal of commission business."

Bolo Punch Fells Champ In 7th Round

Filipino Recognized As Middleweight King In N. Y. and Calif.; Mutt Womer Victor

By the Associated Press

Garcia weighed 153¾; Apostoli 160.

A series of right-hand shots to the chin—the famed "bolo" blow Garcia learned while cutting cane in the sugar fields of his native Philippine Islands—proved too much for the smart boxer from Frisco, and Referee Billy Cavanaugh halted the contest at 2 minutes, 7 seconds of the seventh round with Apostoli on the floor for the third time. The fight was scheduled for fifteen rounds.

The victory gave Garcia, who hails from Los Angeles, recognition as world's 160-pound king in New York State and California, the two places that "blessed" Apostoli's title claims. In all other States, Al Hostak, of Seattle, is the recognized champion.

Even to Seventh

Up to the seventh it was a free-wheeling, give and take battle, with Apostoli scoring heavily with a two-fisted body attack in close, and Garcia biding his time to take pot-shots at openings with the bolo, a cross between a right-uppercut and right hook.

At the end of the sixth, it didn't appear as Garcia was going to do any knocking out this evening. Apostoli, fighting craftily and moving to Ceferino's left to stay out of reach of the right-hand belts, had the Filipino considerably hurt and holding on at the bell.

But Garcia came out for the seventh a new man. Three lefts and a right flush on the chin had Fred badly hurt. Still he came on, but he was wide open, and Garcia, deserting the Bolo punch momentarily for a straight right hand, just about made a punching bag of the title-holder, who was far from the crafty battler of a year ago. Finally Freddie sank to his knees near a neutral corner.

Garcia's Eye Cut

He was up at the count of two and tried gallantly to make a fight of it, but a right hand dropped him to his knees again, and this time he let the timekeeper reach nine before arising. Again he was nailed by a right hand, and this time the arbiter stepped in to halt the proceedings.

The action was nearly even through the early rounds. Fred gained an advantage in the fifth when he opened a cut along Garcia's right eye with a short left, but this only evened matters from the

Fred Marberry In One-Hitter; Red Wings Win

By the Associated Press

Fort Worth, Tex., Oct. 2.—Ancient Fred Marberry stood out in the chill wind tonight and came within one hit—a ninth inning single—of hurling his second no-hit, no-run game of a grand career of 20 years in base ball.

The 40-year-old veteran, who relief pitched Washington to a world championship in 1924, stopped Nashville's Vols, 11 to 0, to send his Fort Worth mates into the seventh and deciding game of the Dixie Series tomorrow night.

Marberry out-pitched, out-talked and out-foxed the Vols, twice threatening to use his fists in a busy evening.

Only four men reached base on Marberry, two getting walks, one on Shortstop Buster Chatham's error and the fourth—the killing one—Shortstop Williams' clean single with one out in the ninth.

Cowboy Scott Loses in Baltimore

Baltimore, Oct. 2 (AP).—Knocked down in the fourth round for the count of eight, Baltimore's Bucky Taylor staged a quick rally tonight and scored a sixth-round knockout over Cowboy Howard Scott, of Washington.

Taylor, who weighed 139¾ to Scott's 135, started the Washingtonian on his way at the close of the fifth with a hard belt to the body that sent him to the canvas. He tagged him for keeps in the next round of the scheduled 10-rounder.

Lambertine Williams, 153, won a unanimous decision from El Brookman, 151, Washington, in a six-round semifinal.

Irish Reserves Sought by Layden

South Bend, Ind., Oct. 2 (AP).—Afraid his first-line regulars might contract early season staleness, Coach Elmer Layden turned a spotlight on the remainder of the Notre Dame football squad today in a search for adequate reserve strength.

Bob Saggau, who suffered a leg cramp in Saturday's Purdue game, was the only member of the squad to take it easy today as Layden snapped his crew through a blocking and tackling drill. The Irish meet Georgia Tech this week-end.

John Bromwich Wins Net Title

By the Associated Press

Los Angeles, Oct. 2.—John Bromwich, of Australia, won the Pacific Southwest tennis tournament singles championship today by defeating Franjo Puncec, of Yugoslavia, 4—6, 6—0, 6—2, 6—4.

The match was a long drawn out affair consisting mainly of base line play by both. Bromwich got off to a slow start, but apparently based his attack on wearing down the European champion. This strategy worked.

Alice Marble, world's champion, also became the new Pacific Southwest women's singles champion by defeating Dorothy May Bundy, Santa Monica, the defending titleholder, 9—7, 6—1.

Alf Vanderbilt Plans 'Special' With New Horses

New York, Oct. 2 (AP).—Although the surrender of the 3-year-old crown to W. L. Brann's Maryland racer, Challedon, by Belair Stud's Johnstown and G. D. Widener's Eight Thirty has forced cancellation of the Pimlico Special as originally scheduled, Alfred G. Vanderbilt, president of the Maryland Jockey Club, said today at Belmont Park that new invitations will be sent to owners later this week and the handicap championship probably will be at stake.

Vanderbilt

Vanderbilt refused to name the horses selected until the invitations have been sent, but pointed out that the race was not limited necessarily to 3-year-olds.

He probably will attempt to settle the handicap championship, for which Challedon, Kayak II and Sorteado are the principal contenders.

The Special, to be run November 1, is a weight-for-age event, to be run of a mile and three-sixteenths with $10,000 added, winner to take all. The Maryland Jockey Club Gold Cup also will become the permanent property of the owner of the winner. The winning trainer will receive a bonus of $1,000. There is no entry or starting fees.

Yankee Star Is Recovered From Ailment

Reds, Completely Confident, Hit Town For Title Struggle; Betting Is Heavy

By Sid Feder,
Associated Press Sports Writer.

New York, Oct. 2.—The World Series pot came to a brisk boil today as the rip-roaring Reds hit town, as full of the rah-rah spirit as the boys of dear old Siwash.

At the same time some lingering doubt still existed in the Yankee camp over the pitching assignment for the first game of the fall set on Wednesday, although all signs pointed to a complete recovery of Red Ruffing's sore arm, thereby sending the American League's top right-hander against Paul Derringer in the curtain-raiser.

Blase New York began to lose some of its "so what" attitude concerning the series with the arrival of the National League's standard bearers, and indications were for the heaviest betting playoff set since the Yankees began their domination of the diamond picture in 1936. The boys with a bob or two apparently weren't afraid of the Yanks this time.

Reds Are Confident

Accustomed as they are to these post-season festivities, New Yorkers just couldn't shrug off the confidence and spirit of the National League challengers. Will McKechnie's hired hands are as full of fight as a nest of hornets. The opinion was they could make a lot of trouble for the Yanks, who are going into the series with their top two twirlers, Ruffing and Lefty Gomez, just recovering from ailments. Nor were the boys and girls overlooking the fact that the Yanks are rounding out a self-satisfied four-year reign at the head of the baseball parade.

With the Reds' possibilities being smoked up, reports from all sections of the country appeared to point out that the betters aren't passing up either the Rhinelanders' chances or the short end of juicy 1-3 odds favoring the Yankees. While the metropolitan centers, like New York, Chicago and Detroit, were going for the Yankees to come up with their fourth straight world title, Midwestern areas generally thought a powerful lot of Cincinnati's chances—and were laying cash on the line to prove it.

Skies Are Dreary

Dreary skies over Yankee Stadium, the scene of battle for the first two games Wednesday and Thursday, made a workout appear distasteful to both contenders today. So the Yankees were content with holding a "skull session" in their clubhouse, while the Reds, who arrived at an early morning hour after Sunday's double-header finale in Pittsburgh, took the day off.

The Yankees announced the gates of the big Bronx ball orchard would be thrown open at 10 a. m. (E. S. T.) Wednesday—3½ hours before "post time"—and immediately 300 fans decided to turn out at the bleacher entrance Tuesday afternoon to get the publicity attendant on being the first through the turnstiles. A total of 34,000 unreserved seats in both bleachers and grandstand will be placed on sale Wednesday morning, and the Yankees, with all box seats already sold, saw the possibilities of a turnout well over the previously expected 50,000.

Baseball's high commissioner, Kenesaw M. Landis, packing his bag in Chicago for his annual trek to the fall classic, announced a line-up of umpires, which included only one "arbiter" who had never officiated in a series before. He was Ralph (Babe) Pinelli, National Leaguer, who, with Beans Reardon, will be the senior circuit's representatives. Reardon worked the 1930 and 1934 sets. The American League "delegates" will be Bill McGowan, who saw service in the '28 and '31 series, and Bill Summers, who worked the '36 affairs.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The notion that Washington has no particular connection with the 1939 World Series isn't exactly correct. No less than four members of the Reds have distinct Washington backgrounds and Washington fans knew two of the Yankees when . . . There's also Jimmy DeShong.

POVICH

DeShong won't be in the series as a Yankee, but the classic didn't exactly pass him by. He will get a world series check of $1,000 for his part in helping the Yankees to win the pennant, which consisted merely of wearing a Yankee uniform for two months and not pitching a ball. On the theory, perhaps, that DeShong was more helpful as a non-working pitcher than as a pitching pitcher, the traditionally liberal Yankees voted him the grand.

In Jake Powell and Bump Hadley, though, Washington has a legitimate claim to World Series interest in the Yankee team. Both of them were in the employ of the Nats for a period of years before strokes of luck separated by two years fetched them with the Yankees. Neither has been potent figures with the Yanks this season, but there are indications that they may step into important World Series roles.

Marse Joe Likes Silver Spring Jake

Powell has been languishing on the Yankees' bench for most of the season which saw Rookie Charley Keller come along with an outburst of base hits and win some recognition as the rookie of the year. Keller, DiMaggio and Selkirk have been the Yankee outfield this season, but any weakness by Selkirk against the Reds' left-handed pitching will not be long tolerated by Manager Joe McCarthy.

McCarthy maintains a great fondness for Powell despite the fact he has kept Jake on the bench. McCarthy likes the aggressive style of Silver Spring Jake and his propensity for doing important things on important occasions. Still vivid in McCarthy's memory is the World Series of three years ago when Jake led all the series hitters in the six games the series required.

Nominally, Hadley would be no considerable figure in the Yankees' pitching plans, but he is beginning to bulk somewhat large. With Lefty Gomez suffering from a strained side and Charley Ruffing troubled by a slight kink in his arm, the pitching picture of the Yanks is at best uncertain. McCarthy may decide to entrust Hadley with a starting job in preference to such as Steve Sundra or Atlee Donald, who will be receiving the series baptism. It was Hadley who in 1936 figured in the 2-1 duel which the Yankees won from fat Freddie Fitzsimmons, of the Giants.

Moving over into the National League World Series camp we find no less than a tax-paying citizen of Washington very much in the Cincinnati line-up. He is Bill Werber, whose exploits at third base this season played no mean part in the Reds' triumphant campaign.

If Werber has any important part in beating the Yankees in the World Series, it will be tantamount to a huge chunk of irony. Because it was the Yankees who financed Werber's way through Duke University, gave him a bonus for signing a big league contract and started him out on life in the big leagues. They traded him to the Red Sox in 1932 when they didn't think he would measure up.

Werber Attained Stardom in National

In the National League, Werber found the stardom he couldn't attain in the American, which regarded him so lightly that all clubs refused him at the $7,500 waiver price last spring when he was shipped to the Reds. On the bases, he is the Reds' counterpart of the wild-running Jake Powell, who is apt to win a game by sheer boldness or toss it off with an over-ambitious display.

There's Al Simmons, of course, who wore a Washington uniform for two years before he lost his temper and threatened to assault a pair of hecklers in the Griffith Stadium field boxes. For that outburst, Griffith fired Simmons, whose bat had been no great help to the Nats anyway. He caught on with the Boston Bees, the weakest hitting club in baseball, but apparently was no great help to the Bees inasmuch as they sold him to the Reds on waivers a few weeks ago.

Simmons is not tabbed as a regular member of the Reds' outfield as the series approaches, but it's a safe wager that he'll be in there at least as a pinch hitter if the Reds are in need of a blow. And with Wally Berger's throwing arm next to useless it would not be surprising to find Simmons supplanting him.

But the most intriguing members of the Reds as far as Washington fans are concerned are two of their brightest young stars, First Baseman Frank McCormick and Centerfielder Harry Craft. They never wore Washington uniforms, but that fact was not their fault and distinctly the Nats' loss.

The Nats Passed Up One of Big Stars

Back in 1935 at Biloxi, Buddy Myer brought a young lad from his Mississippi neighborhood into the camp of the Nats and recommended him to the Washington bosses as a likely-looking big league prospect. With some reluctance they gave him a uniform, but they didn't give him a tumble. He popped up again last season as Centerfielder Craft, of the Reds.

Two years before that incident, a young New York boy walked into the dressing room of the Nats at Yankee Stadium and reported for a tryout. He was there at the request of Trainer Mike Martin, a friend of the lad's dad. Martin begged the Nats to sign the young first baseman. They didn't. The boy's name? Frank McCormick, who batted .325 for the Reds in 1938, and .332 this season. It seems also that he led the National League this year in runs batted in. The Nats had passed up a potent package.

Joe Turner Retires, Dissolving Ring Firm

The firm of Turner & Ahearn, purveyors of boxing in Washington for the past five years, was dissolved yesterday when Joe Turner announced his retirement from the fight business.

He withdrew from the boxing business to concentrate his interests on wrestling ventures. To Ahearn he turned over the boxing privileges of Turner's Arena and Ahearn promptly announced that he would carry on as a lone hand in boxing promotions.

Hastened by $1,000 Loss

Turner's exit from the boxing field was hastened by the financial fiasco of the recent Joey Archibald-Harry Jeffra featherweight title bout at Griffith Stadium and the ill-received decision that retained his title for Archibald.

"I lost more than $1,000 on that promotion," said Turner, "and somehow the fans blame promoters for bad decisions, too. If a world championship fight cannot make us a profit then I think it's time for me to retire."

Turner revealed that his wrestling profits barely offset his losses in fight promoting. Since September, 1938, his boxing ventures have cost him more than $5,600, Turner declared. Only a half dozen shows in the past year netted Turner a profit.

New Backer

Ahearn announced that he has acquired a new backer for his fight ventures and has leased Turner's Arena for weekly shows for the next year. He was uncertain whether he would inherit the Griffith Stadium boxing privileges now owned by Turner but believes that he will stage outdoor shows next summer.

"I am going to stage fights every Monday night between fighters who will fight," declared Ahearn. "My first show will be on October 9 between a pair I can't name yet, but who will be crowd pleasures. My shows will be modeled after the Riding and Hunt Club shows that proved so successful when boxing was first legalized here."

Following the passage of the District boxing law in 1933, Ahearn and Turner operated as rival promoters, with Ahearn promoting bouts at the Riding and Hunt Club. Those were lush days with capacity crowds, but the sale of his club property forced Ahearn out of business. He then joined Turner as the latter's matchmaker.

Bucky Walters To Go on Stage Following Series

Walters

Interviewed at his home here, Bucky answered a question on salary:

"Sure, I figure I'm due for a raise next year. I deserve one and I don't think I'll have any trouble getting it."

Walters said Ernie Lombardi, Billy Myers, Paul Derringer and himself have worked up a skit that will keep them busy in theaters in Ohio as soon as the series is over.

Four Redskins Are Injured And Will Miss Dodger Game

Growing optimism over the chance of the Redskins to repeat their 1937 championship in the National Pro League was dimmed perceptibly yesterday by bad reports on the condition of Sammy Baugh and three other key players injured in the rough battle against the Giants Sunday.

Baugh as well as Fullbacks Max Krause and Jay Turner and End Bob McChesney will definitely miss next Sunday's game against the Brooklyn Dodgers and the latter three probably will be out an additional two weeks.

Baugh's trouble is a strained ligament in his left leg which is expected to respond to a rest treatment plus a supporting cast within a week. Krause is still in Emergency Hospital with a badly strained right knee. McChesney is suffering from four cracked ribs and Turner is down with a separated shoulder reminiscent of the injury that felled Turk Edwards last year.

Two Giants Injured

New York, Oct. 2 (AP).—Ken Strong and Nello Falaschi, two of the most valuable backs of the New York professional football Giants, will be out for several weeks with injuries suffered in yesterday's scoreless tie with the Washington Redskins.

The pro champions announced today that Strong would be on the sidelines three to four weeks with fractures of three transverse process dorsal vertebrae, and Falaschi would be out four to six weeks with a broken right forearm.

Leland Shaffer, like Falaschi a blocking back, twisted his knee, but is expected to return to action within ten days.

Keeling Hockey Coach

New York, Oct. 2 (AP).—William F. Grant, owner of the Kansas City Club in the American Ice Hockey Association, announced today the signing of Melville "Butch" Keeling as player-coach of the Kansas City entry. Keeling, a left wing and defense man with the New York Rangers for ten years, last year was assistant coach and captain of the Philadelphia team.

Three Fastest Hoya Trackmen Volunteer Football Services

G.U. May Use Speedsters in Roanoke Tilt

Mort Alnwick, Braun And Tucknott Eager For Action; Cards, Terps Have Problems

By Jack Munhall.

If it weren't odd enough to look forward to the appearance of Georgetown and George Washington football teams in a doubleheader on the same field the same afternoon, a development yesterday indicated that Saturday's innovation will also offer a preview of G. U.'s 1940 track prospects.

No doubt envious at the success Maryland's sprinter, Joe Murphy, at whizzing around enemy ends amid the joyous shrieks of the fans, three of the Hoyas' fastest trackmen yesterday offered their grid services to Coach Jack Hagerty. Mort Alnwick, 100 and 220 speedster; Vinnie Braun, 440 and mile runner, and George Tucknott, half-mile and mile relay anchor, were promptly received by Coach Hagerty.

Although none of the trio has any varsity football experience and only Braun played on the sandlots, Hagerty is of a mind to use one and maybe all of them against Roanoke if they learn the signals and show ability other than outfooting opponents.

Should Alnwick earn the chance to carry a football instead of a baton, Georgetown could claim the fastest back now playing college football. This honor is claimed by Maryland's Joe Murphy and Syracuse's Marty Glickman, but Alnwick outhoofed both of these worthies in 100-yard dashes last spring.

The volunteering of these three G. U. speedsters may turn out to be more than a publicity stunt, for each is tall enough and heavy enough to weather the knocks of the grid sport. Alnwick, a junior, is an even 6 feet and weighs about 160. Braun, a senior, is 6 feet ½ inch, weighs 185, and Tucknott, only a sophomore, is half an inch taller and scales the same as Braun.

Braun is a former 440-yard national schoolboy champion and Tucknott anchored the De LaSalle quartet which sped to an all-time mile scholastic relay record.

Another bit of glad tidings came to Coach Hagerty yesterday when it was learned from X-ray pictures that Francis Daly, senior end, did not suffer a separated shoulder bone in Friday's game with Temple but merely a bad bruise. Instead of being out for the season as would have been the result of a separated shoulder bone, Daly now is expected to be back for the Syracuse game October 14.

Tickets for the G. W. and G. U. double-header at Griffith Stadium Saturday continued yesterday to sell at a brisk pace. All seats are reserved for the first time for a college game here and priced at $1.10. They may be procured at either school, and at the three A's.

Catholic U. Continues Search for Passer

Though Catholic University's opening football victory over South Carolina was gratifying, it still emphasized the Cardinals' lack of a passer, Coach Bergman said yesterday. Therefore in C. U.'s drills this week for Saturday's first home game against Elon the quest will be renewed with increasing vigor.

Fortunately, said Bergman, the South Carolina game was played on a wet and muddy field, which was not conducive to passing by either team, and C. U. won mostly because its running attack was superior to that of South Carolina. Joe Guyon, especially, starred on the C. U. attack.

Maryland Must Find End Replacements

With Dick Shaffer, its best all-around end, lost probably for the remainder of the season and flank replacements scarce, Coach Frank Dobson also will be in a searching mood this week.

Francis Beamer, Frank Dwyer and Leo Mueller are the only other ends with any experience whatsoever and since two of them will be needed in the starting line-up, Dobson will be left with only one dependable substitute.

Other than Shaffer's injury Dobson expressed satisfaction with developments of Maryland's 26-0 victory over Hampden-Sydney. Bernie Ulman and Vernon Miller, reserve backs up from last year's junior varsity, have possibilities, he said.

Freshman End John Siegal was the other scorer while Joe Stydahar, one-time West Virginia University star, and Jack Manders counted the two extra points.

Godoy Is Offered Louis Title Fight

Buenos Aires, Oct. 2 (U.P.).—Arturo Godoy, former South American heavyweight champion, has received an offer to fight Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis for the title early next year, it was learned authoritatively here today.

Godoy, who said that he had been offered a few tuneup bouts to get in condition for the Louis match, will sail for the United States within two weeks if he decides to accept. He holds two decisions over Tony Galento, Orange, N. J., heavyweight contender.

Veteran Sea Gulls' Hockey Mentor to Coach D. C. Team

Redvers MacKenzie, Golf Pro and Sports Writer, Signed to Pilot Washington Eagles

Severine G. Loeffler, owner of the Riverside Stadium, which will sponsor the Washington Eagles in the Eastern Amateur Hockey League this season, yesterday announced the signing of Redvers Mackenzie to coach the team.

Mackenzie, known as "Red" to patrons of the Eastern League in which he formerly coached the Atlantic City Sea Gulls, will meet local sports writers and radio announcers at a luncheon at the Raleigh today when he will outline his plans for the city's first entry in an important ice hockey league.

Mackenzie

Mackenzie coached the Sea Gulls for the last nine years and is the oldest coach in the Eastern League in term of service. He has been a golf professional and a golf writer for the Montreal Star and is a member of the executive committee of the Canadian P. G. A. Mackenzie also has covered amateur and pro ice hockey for the Montreal Star.

Thirty-four home games in the Eastern League are scheduled for the Eagles team, which will include many of the stars of the 1938 Sea Gulls. The Eagles will play twice a week. Their road slate lists 22 games. The Eastern League, called the best balanced amateur ice hockey league in existence, is seven years old and will line up this season with teams from Baltimore, New York and Riverdale, N. J., in addition to Washington and Atlantic City.

The Washington Chapter of the University of Virginia Alumni Association will hold a pre-Navy game rally Friday at 8 p. m. in the Italian Garden at the Mayflower Hotel.

In his dressing room, Garcia and his manager, George Parnassus, said they would take on Apostoli in a return bout, if he wanted it, "or anybody else who wants to challenge us."

For Garcia, the triumph meant finally hitting the jackpot after three futile attempts to grab the brass ring in the welterweight division. Twice he was beaten by Barney Ross and once by Henry Armstrong in vain tries to win the 147-pound crown. Now, after campaigning among the 160-pounders less than a year, he has taken the prize in his first crack at the throne.

Irwin Kay, 142, Los Angeles, and Irish Johnny Mack, 141, New Britain, Conn., battled to a draw in a fast, close six-rounder.

In a six-rounder after the feature go, Holman Williams, 147¾, Detrol, outpointed Carl Dell, 148, Oneonta, N. Y.

New York Giants Bid for Contract Of Whizzer White

Pittsburgh, Oct. 2 (AP).—The New York Giants of the National Professional Football League are seeking Byron (Whizzer) White, former Colorado University halfback, who played last season with Pittsburgh, Art Rooney, president of the Pirates, disclosed tonight.

WHITE

White arrived a few days ago from England after the war in Europe caused cessation of all Rhodes scholarships at Oxford University, one of which he held.

Rooney said Tim Mara, president of the Giants, telephoned that he wanted to obtain White's contract, which called for a record $15,000 last year. He said Mara told him White is visiting friends in New Haven, Conn.

Challedon May Race Opening Day At Keeneland

Lexington, Ky., Oct. 2 (AP).—Challedon, one of the crack 3-year-olds in the Nation, is a probable entry in the opening day feature at Keeneland's 10-day autumn race meeting opening October 10.

Track Superintendent W. T. Bishop reported today W. L. Brann, owner of the son of Challenger II, had advised officials he expected to ship the colt here and likely would start him in the $5,000 Tranter, a weight-for-age 3-year-old test over one mile and three-sixteenths.

Highlight of the meeting is the $20,000 Breeders' Futurity on October 21, closing day, and it is expected to draw one of the classiest 2-year-old fields of the season.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

If anybody is wondering what ever became of Corrinne Griffith, one-time "Orchid of the Screen," she is here rapidly becoming the most influential woman in modern sports. The California girl whom Hollywood made into a kind of hot-house flower is, in truth, the main reason for the incredible success of the burly Washington Redskins, whose verve, color and prosperity is influencing the whole picture of American football.

CONSIDINE

"The Orchid of the Screen," has become "The Orchid of the Screen Pass."

She—who is Mrs. George Marshall—has brought subtle stagecraft to the forbidding reaches of the football stadia. A Redskin game is now some something resembling a fast-moving revue, with cues, color, settings, music, pace, tableaux and, hold your hats, boys, a ballet. But the amazing part of it all is that there's room left on the program for the football game. And, miraculously, the furbelows are never corny, never inappropriate, and charm rather than infuriate those hard-boiled football fans who want their football raw.

When the Redskins played the Giants here Sunday the early arriver was stimulated by a program of music from a 55-piece band whose repertoire had been especially chosen to stir up his blood pressure.

19-Piece Swing Band Provides Background

Once the game was under way the musical background was a 19-piece swing band, mounted in a smart canvas teepee at the back of a section of bleachers. Each time a Redskin substitute went into the game, like a courier rushing up to the general with news of an armistice, the band would play the guy's State song or college song, and the natives of that State who happened to be in the audience would let out really mighty yips. At the half-time intermission smoke began pouring out of the top of the big teepee, a rhythmic tom-tom set up, and out on the field war-hooped a 93-piece band in Indian dress, playing "Hail to the Redskins," lyrics by Mrs. Marshall, costumes by Mrs. Marshall, arrangements by Mrs. Marshall, shoes by I. Miller.

The ballet had to be called off Sunday because the field was muddy (a circumstance which led one of the bands to play "Mississippi Mud.") but ballets will be a feature on all dry tracks. The mud-canceled ballet had to do generally with life in New York. During this week Mrs. Marshall will create, write rehearse and then finally stage a ballet having to do with Brooklyn, for the Dodgers will come down here Sunday. This should be moderately simple in Redskin territory, in view of the fearful scalping the baseball Dodgers' management tolerated this past season.

Mrs. Marshall designed the maroon and gold uniforms the Redskins wear, convinced her husband to try the audacious experiment of letting his coach do the coaching for a change, and was mainly instrumental in moving the franchise from Boston to Washington. So far as we know it was a sweet smile from this beautiful squaw that got Vice President Garner to consent to toss out the first ball, a smart piece of business.

Carter Glass Wires Good Wishes From Sick Bed

The success of the team in Washington has been next to unbelievable. It rained steadily for 18 hours before the start of the Redskins-Giants game Sunday, but when the soggy kick-off came the stadium proper was filled and only a couple thousand more could have been crammed in the unprotected bleachers. Carter Glass, the senior Senator from Virginia, wired from his sickbed to wish the team well. Several hundred sodden citizens stood in the rain after the game, to buy seats for next Sunday's Dodger game. An elderly lady sent word to the players' quarters that she would like to be a mother to Andy Farkas, a Redskin back whose ferocious manner of playing makes him look about as easy to housebreak as a wild boar. At least 40 of the 90-odd (quite odd) Senators who are in town to pass on the President's neutrality act revisions, were among those who braved the rain to see (1 the show and 2) the football game. Jesse Jones, director of the world's largest pawnshop (the RFC), was on the 50-yard line.

The Redskins are a great spectacle, but a spectacle into which has been poured considerable dough and considerable talent. A Redskin game gives so much, in addition to football, that the team has performed the considerable miracle of changing Washington, from a chronically disinterested sports town into a kind of Brooklyn-without-accent. And mainly, as I see it, through the contributions of a lady who up until a few years ago believed in her heart that a blocked punt was a canoe in distress. The things she has done to unite football and extravaganza are already being copied throughout the pro league and are certain to seep into football in general for as pro ball goes, so goes Pittsburgh. From near bankruptcy the Redskins now have come up to the eminence of drawing something in the neighborhood of 350,000 people in a single short season, and they have so aroused this hard-to-please village that there is a move afoot to rename the ballyard Corinne Griffith Stadium.

13 Sprinters Named for Capital Handicap at Laurel Today

Rough Time Will Tackle Sun Egret

Christmas Ace Seeks 3d Win in Stake; Track to Offer Tote Betting First Fime

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent.

With the track in more suitable condition for Billy Rose's Aquacade than for racing, representatives of 13 owners dropped entry slips into the box yesterday to make as many horses eligible for today's $7,500 added Capital Handicap. This event, which promises to be a struggle through mud and more mud, will feature the opening of the 25-day meeting at nearby Laurel Park.

The race, for 3-year-olds and upward, promises to bring a clash of Yancy Christmas' Rought Time and the A. C. C. Stable's Sun Egret. As both are favorable to mud, they are likely to be in the starting line-up. Rough Time, Maryland-bred son of Grand Time, will be trying to make it three straight victories in the Capital.

Rough Time comes to today's effort as a 5-year-old and fresh from a New York stake victory. The Upper Marlboro hope, however, must carry 122 pounds, 2 more than assigned to Sun Egret, and the latter may be the favorite by a shade as the field reaches Starter Milton over in the 6-furlong chute. Sun Egret turned back formidable opposition in an overnight race and the Susquehanna Handicap at Havre de Grace. The Sun Briar colt, a year the junior of Rough Time, definitely has regained top form.

Sprint Title at Stake

While the unofficial sprint championship of Marylnad will be at stake, and most fans will back one or the other of the high weight horses, the field, before scratch time at least, includes several speedsters who can "carry the mail" and may surprise, due to light assignments. For instance, Jay Jay, owned by Howard Bruce, won this race three years ago and finished second to Sun Egret in the Susquehanna. He carries 112 pounds.

Bull Whip, Brandywine Stable sprinter, gets in with a mere 107 pounds and is sharp as the proverbial tack. El Chico, one-time Kentucky Derby hope, has been staging a comeback and will have scattered support in the wagering. Slow Motion, Be Blue, Clodion, Joe Schneck, Ariel Toy and Lady Maryland are others not to be counted out at the weights Racing Secretary John P. Turner has ordered.

Lady Maryland, owned by Gustavetave Ring, will make Washington's bid for victory in the race named for the District. Ring, realtor and builder, will ride Jockey Lee Hardy, who performed in good fashion at Havre de Grace.

While mud chased many rivals out of last Saturday's Havre de Grace Handicap against Chalkedon, it is believed that the promise of an off, in fact an awful track will serve to lure many trainers into trying to knock off Rough Time and Sun Egret.

No Steeplechase

The Capital is the first of eight stakes and handicaps scheduled for the month session. Due to yesterday's driving rain and high tide in the infield, the first major track steeplechasing of the fall season was postponed. As soon as the turf conditions are suitable, the timber-toppers will swing into action.

In addition to the big race, the opening day program will include a purse roce for 2-year-olds, located fourth on the card. Only five interests are represented in the 6-furlong test. Philosopher, winner at Havre de Grace, will meet Rawson, Glorious Time, True Star and the Bowman-Christmas entry of Rough Biscuit and Rough Pass.

The totalizator crew tried out the new automatic wagering machine yesterday. The mutuel department "ran" an imaginary race and a $24.60 pay-off was flashed on No. 2 horse. In addition to the tote, the track will use the Jones camera, siliva tests and the like.

Post time for the first race is 1:30 p. m. and the daily double will be conducted on the first and third race. This will be the order on the twin wager throughout the meeting, regardless of days on which steeplechase races are offered.

Armstrong-Ambers Fight Postponed

New York, Oct. 2 (AP).—The world's welterweight championship fight between Henry Armstrong and Lou Ambers, scheduled for Madison Square Garden, November 1, was postponed a month today until December 1.

The postponement followed a conference between members of the New York State Athletic Commission, Promoter Mike Jacobs and Al Weill and Eddie Mead, managers of Ambers and Armstrong. Ambers also was present.

Ambers, who is to be married Thursday at Herkimer, N. Y., had asked for an indefinite postponement. When both the commission and Jacobs refused to consider this, the December date was agreed.

Both fighters were permitted to engage in tune-up fights in the meantime.

Selections at Laurel

Dear Al:

The December meeting at Charles Town will not conflict with Bowie, it was learned yesterday. The West Virginia track will operate from December 4 to 16. Previously it had been announced that Charles Town would be open for three days along with Bowie which adds two days this fall to make up for time lost when the big freeze out came at the November meeting last year. The West Virginia Racing Commission, however, has decided that due to friendly relations with the Maryland Commission there will be no conflict. That is as it should be. Workouts yesterday at Laurel were few and far between due to the driving rain. The best time was made by the Royal Blue, which breezed a mile and a quarter in 0:59 when it went by on the adjacent track. Up to a late hour yesterday the judges for the meeting had not been assigned. My guess is Eddie Brennan, John P. Turner and Ty Shea. With the infield partially flooded, the entries came out with the fourth race named "The Still Pond Purse." Brother Stevens and Bill Martin treated the scribes to lunch yesterday. Customers will have to buy glasses or stand close to someone who knows the horses. They will not be informed as to the positions of the steeds. The number-position board that Tommy Daly operated last year has been removed and the track has not installed a public address system. What, not even canned music? Apprentices Charles Friedman and George Wallace will resume saddle work today after being set down at the Graw. They are likely to give Earl Mower a run for the apprentice honors at the meeting. The boys applying for badges yesterday certainly missed the late "Cy" Cummings. It took him a long time to make many friends for this track.

BILL.

First race—Pompe Grande, bred for the off track, may emerge from the maiden ranks in this field. This one has had plenty of education and I understand E. Mower, the popular apprentice, will do the riding. Westly comes from a barn full of fit ones and may turn up as a good thing in the field. Screw Driver's outing at Havre de Grace was a creditable one and there may be improvement today.

Second race — White Cockade came back after a long layoff to win at the first asking. Loves the mud and should make it two in a row. Roar had oodles of speed in New York and deserves some attention. Court Dance won her last and is dangerous.

36 Pros, 38 Amateurs Enter Middle Atlantic P. G. A.-Open

Cruickshank, Al Jamison Will Not Play

Pro-Amateur Event Tomorrow, Followed By Calcutta Pool, Pros Annual Meeting

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The starting field for the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Open at Columbia was announced last night, with 36 professionals and 38 amateurs from the District, Maryland and Virginia paired in threesomes for the first 36-hole play on Thursday.

The pairings were all drawn from a hat, thus none of the players received preferred partners, and the luck of the draw, among other things, pitted the only two Jenkins in the tourney as partners, W. C. Jenkins, of Capital, and Elmer Jenkins, Washington.

The field includes virtually every eligible in the section, excepting Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, whose club is host to the city tournament on that date, and Al Jamison, Indian Spring, who will also be detained at his club. Defending Champion Lee Walpa heads the list.

The amateurs are topped by the new District champion, Ralph Bogart, former champ Billy Shea, Volney Burnett, and Baltimore's No. 2 simon-pure, Spencer Overton.

Every player that turns in a card will be eligible for Friday's two final rounds, with the pairings changed to pit the leaders together. The Henry Picard-Byron Nelson exhibition match will follow the field, about 2:40 p. m. on Thursday.

A pro-amateur tomorrow will also serve as a practice round for the event, with all pros in this section eligible to participate, with one amateur partner.

Wednesday night the players will be sold in an informal Calcutta Pool in the grill room, that will be followed by the annual meeting and election of officers of the Middle Atlantic P. G. A., plus the naming of delegates to the national convention in Chicago.

Friday night the 15 prize winners, including the winner's check for $400, the 14 other pro prizes and various amateur awards will be presented at the testimonial dinner to Fred McLeod. P. G. A. President George Jacobus will be honored guest.

Concord Upsets Roanoke, 14-12

By the Associated Press

Salem, Va., Oct. 2.—A listless Concord College football team, outplayed and outscored in the first half here tonight, caught fire somewhere during the intermission and came back with such a rush they swept the bewildered Maroons off their feet, 14 to 12.

The 1,500 fans had settled back to watch the second half, secure in the knowledge Roanoke led 12-0 and had flashed such power plays combined with such sparkling line plays the Lions could get nowhere.

But their comfort turned to worry when the once docile Lions began to roar, blocking three straight Maroon kicks, the final bounding off the ample chest of Fusan Cvizic and over the goal line where Jake Maynard, Concord end, fell all over it for the first six points.

Taking the ball on the Roanoke 41, Concord drove to pay-off territory without interruption for the winning touchdown.

Score by periods:

Roanoke	6	6	0	0—12
Concord	0	0	14	0—14

Scoring summary: Roanoke touchdowns—Hancock, Whitlock. Concord touchdowns—Maynard (2). Points from try after touchdown—Bowers (2).

Perry Knapp's 364 and Kessler's 138 were best in the Kilowatt League, also at Lucky Strike, while Old Timers led the team scores with 605 and 1,679.

Section 2 of the Procurement League found E. W. Samual's 349 and F. E. Robbin's 136 as the best set and game, while Gothics had a 562 game. Section 1 leader was Sneiderwine, with 140-367.

ARCADIA

Astor Clarke boosted his average to 137 in the Federal Men's League at Arcadia, while Dutch Newman, of the same team, had 163, and the team a 642 game, all season records. They also posted high set, 1,785.

Freight Traffic monopolized the Southern Railway Clerks League at Arcadia, with team totals of 552, 1,551, and N. Murphy's 140-353.

Joe Gauzza's 147 game and Mkie Vitale's 363 set were good in the Navy League, while Ordinance had 598 and 1,716.

Bob Dunkelberger, Alexander Win

Atlanta, Oct. 2 (AP).—Running up a flock of lop-sided scores, eight teams from six States advanced today to the second round of the annual Southern four-ball golf tournament.

Bobby Dunkelberger, Southern amateur champ from High Point, N. C., and Skip Alexander, Duke University's Southern Conference titlist, captured a favorite's role by trimming Louisiana's Henry Castillo and Raymond Salmen, 3-1. The Tarheels were ten strokes under the tough East Lake Country Club par for the 35 holes of their match against the strong Louisiana pair.

D. C. High School Athletes Entering a Banner Season

Athletics Here on Highest Plane in History; Boys Get Thorough Training During Sessions

By Bill Burnett

History, they say, has a delightful way of repeating itself. "They" may be correct, but schoolboy athletics in Washington must get beyond the short pants stage before history can do anything in their case.

Nineteen thirty-nine, from indications last year, will mark the highest level the public high brand of football, basketball, baseball and track has ever reached. For 48 years the schools have struggled through lack of athletic appropriations, unsympathetic principals, etc., and just now they're coming into their own.

Instead of four loosely organized schools in the early 90s, only two of which had enough men, money or interest in sports to go in for them, the District now has sveen institutions which go whole hog into every sports endeavor from gymnastics to table tennis.

Instead of playing their games on borrowed or rented fields and courts, each school now has its own baseball diamond, footbal gridiron, basketball court and track. Western, Central, Roosevelt and Tech have better grids than the metropolitan colleges, while Anacostia and Wilson, the two newcomers, expect to complete stadia comparable to any here this season. Tech's gym seats no less than 5,000, and Eastern and Roosevelt can find room for only a few less.

Experts Train Boys

And instead of learning sports fundamentals, or a reasonable facsimilie, from student upstarts or men whose closest contact with athletics was a third string guard berth on some unheard of eleven, 1939 aspirants to sports fame learn their blocking, man to man guarding and high jumping from no less than 20 experts who spend their full time teaching just physical education. They come from all over the country, boast a wide assortment of Pi. D.'s, and several all-American performers are included.

This fancy setup, as you have guessed, costs a flock of money. Those glamorously attired gridders and cagemen the seats of learning throw on the fields this year didn't get that way because the coaches dug down in their own pockets and paid for it. One representative coach confesses his equipment, including only uniforms and more or less temporary rigging, cost in the vicinity of $4,000. And the upkeep per year amounts to about $1,200 over and above his percentage of various "gates."

About the only way history is repeating itself is in the winner of annual football race. Central once more appears about to start a title streak such as it enjoyed at the start of interhigh activity and later under Cuvier Metzler. Last season with Hardy Pearce, an outstanding gridman with George Washington, at the helm the Blue and White went undefeated to win back the crown Tech had taken in 1936 and Eastern skipped off with in 1937.

Basketball laurels, as they have been almost continually since 1931, are still in the hands of Eastern. And the same school, except for a baseball lapse last spring to allow Central its first title in three years, still dominates the diamond game. Central trackmen have won three crowns in a row, but each one was close enough to make it interesting.

Besides a division of the seven interhigh clubs into Eastern and Western divisions for the football series, which should bring about closer competition, another innovation is being made that eventually may put schoolboy football on the same plane as it enjoys in other cities. Night football will be tried for the first time.

Central's Coach Pearce is the originator of the idea, or at least the first one to put it to practice. He will send his interhigh champions of 1938 against St. John's, parochial champions, Friday night at Griffith Stadium. On that first endeavor, Pearce says, will depend the future of schoolboy ball at night. If it works, several interhigh games may be played at night next season, and no one can guess what a boon that will be to attendance.

This, then, is the scene as the forty-eighth year of interhigh football gets under way this week-end. It's been a long, tough haul from the beginning, but schoolboy sports have survived—even thrived—quite well.

Redskins Hold Best Defensive Record in League; Giants Next

The best defensive record in the National Football League is owned by the Washington Redskins, official figures announced yesterday revealed. The Redskins, who have held opponents to an average of 122 yards gained in two games, hold a clear margin over the New York Giants, their nearest challenger for defensive honors.

By the margin of one forward pass, the Brooklyn Dodgers lead the Redskins for passing honors in the Eastern Division of the league, but the Cleveland Rams top the league's passing department. The Rams have completed 40 out of 70 passes, compared to the Redskins' 16 completions in 34 attempts and the Dodgers' 17 completions in 35 tries.

Despite rain in the eastern sector during the third week of play, forward passing was 45 per cent proficient in the league.

Detroit and the Chicago Bears continue to be the offensive pacemakers, the former with an average of 24 points a game and the latter with an average of 312 yards. Detroit is second in grand gaining with an average of 308 yards and Washington third with 263. The Bears are second in scoring with an average of 23 points and Cleveland third with a 20-point average.

Broomfield Looms Victor At Fort Myer

Capt. Hoge's Gelding Running Ahead for Open Jumping Title

Broomfield, Capt. Kenneth Hoge's consistent bay gelding, piled up 13 points to practically clinch the open jumping championship in the early part of the Columbus Horse Show, which finally defied a sneering weatherman by holding the final session of the event in Fort Myer's indoor riding hall last night.

In the early events of the show, Capt. Hoge's mount won the Olympic class and the $200 open jumping stake to come out one point ahead of his nearest competitor, Howard Butz' 22-year-old Hobo. Hobo, ridden by Malvern Bell, still stood a chance to take the tri-color by winning a ribbon in the triple bar class, which wound up the open jumping classes. Broomfield was not entered in the latter event, which left an even-money chance for either Hobo or Fred Hughes' Black Caddy to pile up enough points to win the championship.

Top thrill of the evening came when the knockdown-and-out class fences went to 5 feet 6 inches in a jump-off between Black Caddy and J. F. Edwards of Sharpsburg, Pa., on Spiorve. Hughes' well-known stallion, painted like a zebra in anticipation of the costume class that was next on the card, sneaked over the formidable looking jumps in his customary careful style to defeat Spiorve, which had a knockdown.

The hunter championship was undecided by the early classes as Mrs. Haggin Perry's Demopolis, Mrs. D. N. Lee's Red Fox, and George G. Lee's bay gelding, Lee's Birthday, were tied for the award, with the Corinthian class left to bring out the ultimate victor.

Smithsonian, District Dog, Wins Derby

Special Dispatch to The Post

Leesburg, Va., Oct. 2.—Hunting in rain and under weather conditions that would test the stamina of older dogs, three outstanding puppies did such good work that at the end of the first series the winner of the derby had been selected by the judges of the sixth annual field trial today at J. D. Thomas, farm, near Round Hill.

The trials, scheduled to begin early this morning, were postponed until afternoon on account of heavy rain. Lighter rain this afternoon did not keep the sportsmen in.

First place in the derby was won by Smithsonian, a black and white English setter, belonging to A. Ralph, of Washington, D. C., and handled by Porter Carter, of Virginia. This young puppy has been outstanding this year.

Second place went to Betsy of Carodac, owned by W. J. Harper, of Leesburg, Va., and Chevy Chase, Md. This was also a black and English setter by Valient Three Suort out of Ginger Joy. Third place went to Peter Pan, another black and white English setter belonging to Virgil Hawse, of Staunton, Va.

The all-age stake will start at 7 a. m. tomorrow morning. There are 17 braces in this stake. The members shooting stakes have 21 entries

Debate on the wisdom of the Redskins' third-down pass from the Giants' 13 in Sunday's game with the Giants continued yesterday at the weekly luncheon meeting of the Football Writers Association and college and professional coaches . . . First impressions of all the writers who saw the game were that Frank Filchock had been guilty of poor judgment when he gambled on a pass—which was intercepted—instead of keeping the ball for a field goal attempt on the fourth down . . . However, after Redskin Coach Ray Flaherty explained that on the play the passer, who was Filchock, had an option of running or passing depending on whether the potential pass receiver was clear, opinion was altered . . . It was finally agreed by most that it was just another play which made a hero or a bum of the quarterback . . . Flaherty said Filchock had decided to pass because the Giant backfield had been playing close behind the line to stop the running of Filchock and Farkas and he believed Wayne Millner, the potential receiver, would be able to get behind the secondary . . . Millner did and had the pass been just a bit higher the Redskins probably would have scored a touchdown on the play . . .

FARKAS

Frank Dobson, Maryland coach, got off the best crack of the meeting when he declared that he had seen many low tricks practiced by one college to scout another's football team, but George Washington and Georgetown hit a new high when they decided to collaborate in a double-header in the same stadium . . . this, he further charged, was an unprecedented economy move by Gabriel Murphy, G. U. graduate manager of atnletics, which saved the traveling expenses of a scout . . .

The sale of $4,000 worth of tickets at the gate Sunday during the bad rainstorm proved beyond a doubt that Washington is not only a good sports town but a great one, Dobson said, and there were no dissenters . . . the failure of the fans to support wrestling and boxing here only proved they are discriminate, one writer added . . .

Grid Grit . . . Al Blozis, Georgetown's 6-foot-6, 238-pound shot and discus thrower, was a terror against Temple Friday when he started his first varsity game for Georgetown at tackle . . . On one play aimed at the end on his side of the line Blozis broke through like a Mack truck, picked up the ball carrier as you would a cat and pitched him for a 10-yard loss . . . Frank Farkas, first cousin of the Redskins' eccentric backfield star, is a freshman football player at George Washington, and a younger brother of Pitt's Marshall Goldberg will be in the backfield of Davis and Elkins when it meets G. W. here Saturday . . . JACK MUNHALL.

Joe DiMaggio, Johnny Mize Top Batters

'Clipper' Is 19 Points Below Mark of .400; N. L. Leader Has .349

By the Associated Press

New York, Oct. 2.—Joe DiMaggio, of the New York Yankees, and Johnny Mize, of the St. Louis Cardinals, assumed the major league batting titles today.

The "Yankee Clipper" finished the American League season with a .381 mark, well below the .400 class to which he had aspired, but still 32 points better than the winning percentage last year of Jimmy Foxx, of the Boston Red Sox.

Mize's mark of .349 also was better than last year, when Ernie Lombardi, of the Cincinnati Reds, topped the National League at .342.

For the big Cardinal first baseman the championship climaxed a three-year quest. He was second both in 1937 and 1938. One of the minor surprises of the batting race was the feat of Frank McCormick, of Cincinnati, in nosing out Joe Medwick, of the Cards, for second place on the final day of the season.

Home run production fell off almost 50 per cent during the season with Foxx, who also was second in batting although out of action for approximately the last month, leading both leagues with 35.

Ted Williams, of the Red Sox, set a major league precedent by batting in the most runs in the American League, 142, first time a rookie won the honor. McCormick's 128 was tops in the National.

The final unofficial batting records:

Post's Trophy Golf Tourney Is Postponed

Championship Event Is Tentatively Slated For Week of Oct. 16

The first rain jinx of the season for the District Women's Golf Association's tournaments hit The Washington Post Trophy Tourney and forced a cancellation of the event scheduled today over the Chevy Chase course.

The event will probably be played the week of October 16. The remainder of this week's card finds the Middle Atlantic P. G. A. Open at Columbia the center of attraction, plus the Maryland State Golf Association Women's Field Day Thursday at Indian Spring.

Next week the Middle Atlantic Golf Association's annual women's championship at Washington Golf and Country Club fills the first five days.

Mrs. Robert A. Lacey, president of the District Women's Golf Association; Mrs. Frank Kramer, tournament chairman, and Mrs. Landra Platt and Mrs. Hugh Rowan, of the host club, decided on the postponement when yesterday's rains left the course unplayable.

The same pairings and starting times will apply for the event two weeks hence, for the original starting field of 193, a record-tying number. No additional entries will be accepted.

With the tournament shifted from its usual September date to October, plus the postponement, Mrs. Arnold McNitt thus holds the title longer than any of the other five Post match play champions.

The new date for the tournament will be announced tomorrow.

Quaker City Gets 3 Service Games

It was signed by Acting Mayor George Connell, Capt. E. K. McKee, of the Navy, and Lieut. Col. Louis E. Hibbs, of the Army.

The 1939 game, to be played here December 2, will be the fortieth between the two teams and the twenty-second played at Philadelphia, the last eight in a row.

Grains Yield To Peace Talk From Europe

Wheat Off 1⅜-1¾ Cents, Corn 1-1¼ And Oats ¾-1⅛

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Sept 2.—The grain market was back under the influence of "European peace talk" today and price declines of 1 to 2 cents a bushel erased most of the gains chalked up Saturday.

Weakness in securities and prospects of some scattered showers in Nebraska, the Dakotas and Minnesota also were bearish factors, although the prospective moisture was regarded as of little consequence, with most crop experts expressing belief that the fall drought still is unbroken, generally speaking. Dust was reported blowing in some localities in the West.

Pending the Hitler and Chamberlain speeches, Congressional neutrality debate and private crop forecasts Wednesday, potential buyers remained on the sidelines. Selling, though not large, was presistent, but when the market touched early lows it dried up and fractional rallies took place at times.

Wheat, being off as much as 2⅛ cents at one stage, closed 1⅜ to 1¾ lower than Saturday, December, 82⅞ to 82⅝; May, 83⅛ to 83⅜. Corn finished 1 to 1¼ down; December, 49⅞; May, 52⅜ to 52⅞; oats, ⅜ to 1⅛ off; rye, 1¼ to 1⅝ off, and lard 18 to 27 lower.

Prices Work Lower in Lighter Trading Operations Indicate Waiting Attitude U. S. Bonds Show Degree of Firmness

New York, Oct. 2.—Quiet ruled on the Western Front and also on the front of Broad and Wall streets today. Trading on the big board, in both stocks and bonds, was the lightest in more than a month. Prices were heavy from the beginning and they were unable to start anything during the five-hour session that could be labelled a rally.

Judged by the composite average for stocks, there was a decline of 0.55 point, and this meant losses of from 1 to 3 points in the more volatile leaders. United States Government bonds were irregular, with a slight advantage to the up side, most of the foreign dollar bonds continued to sell off and wheat was weak, and the general tendency of most other commodities was to follow and irregular course. In other words, it was a day in which little could be said for the speculative markets. Their trends indicated nothing more than a waiting attitude, while traders tried to fathom the intricacies of international affairs.

Peace Hits

This is a large assignment, and apparently it was more than most investors wished to tackle today. There were those who read between the lines of European dispatches the hint that a peace of some nature is far from being an impossibility, and there may have been a sufficiently large number in this school of thought to influence the market on its down trend.

While stocks have been going up on the basis of large scale orders for all types of companies, and these orders have come almost entirely from domestic purchasers rather than from the belligerents, the fact remains that a portion of the latest bullish upswing has been due to the outbreak of hostilities. Consequently, any signs of peace can be expected to bring a peace scare to the stock market, and consequent selling.

This is illustrated by the condition which now exists in the steel industry. Operations for this week are placed at 87½ per cent of capacity. Only a month ago the industry was at less than 60 per cent. The sudden increase has been due almost entirely to domestic orders. Major companies report that while they are doing a foreign business, as they have always done, there is nothing that could be classed as a war order. The obvious explanation is that domestic consumers who need steel are afraid of rising prices and also of possible difficulty in getting their requirements filled in the event this country does receive orders from the belligerents.

War Spurs Buying

More or less the same story could be told about other industries. Railroads that have needed new cars and rails for years suddenly decided to buy them now. And so on down the line, affecting virtually every major industry. The war touched off the buying, but to date the business is the regular run of the mill type. Under such conditions one might wonder why the stock market should ease off when there is a peace scare. The answer is a complicated one, but in rough outline it lies in the fact that when prices are easing everyone delays purchases to a hand-to-mouth rate, when prices are rising the same people rush to fill their requirements for months in advance, and if the war should end suddenly and this potential source of demand thus be cut off, the tendency would be to stop forward buying. This makes the stock market subject to the news and rumors from Europe, even though the business of the companies listed on our exchanges is almost entirely devoted to filling our own requirements, not those of Europe.

Steels were hardest hit in today's selling, despite the jump in operations for the industry. They had done the best in the early run-up of the war market and consequently were the targets of profit takers. Railroads followed a similar course as did the aviations and numerous manufacturing stocks concerned in the war business.

Utilities held relatively firm in the day's transactions as they had not participated to the same extent in the previous rise. The most active stock of the day was United States Steel, which sold off more than 2 points. Central was next with a fractional decline and then Kodak dropped 3, Bethlehem, 2½ and Allied Chemical 2. Losses of around a point were sustained by Baldwin, Pennsylvania, Atchison, du Pont, Harvest, Union Pacific and United Aircraft. Loew's developed special strength and there was good buying in carpet stocks, on the basis of higher prices. Trading amounted to only 837,890 shares.

Bond Trading Smaller

Small volume and an easier price trend over much of the list marked trading in listed bonds today. Turnover on the stock exchange at a total of $7,845,000 was the smallest for any day since August 31, when the volume was $3,458,000.

The slowness of the market tended to rob price changes of great significance. Treasury obligations on the big board showed some gains as high as 10-32 and in the over-counter market closing prices were similarly improved for most of the list.

The average of 30 domestic issues declined 0.19 points on the day, losses being shown by high grade and speculative rails while industrials were up 0.03 points and utilities up 0.20 point.

Foreign bonds were decidedly mixed with substantial losses appearing in some Belgian and Norwegian issues while gains appeared in the Italian section and a rise of more than 4 points was scored by a Queensland issue.

Cotton Futures Slip Lower in Narrow Range

New York, Oct. 2 (AP).—Cotton futures traders marked time today as they waited for a little more definite news regarding possible peace in Europe. Selling was just about as lackadaisical as buying and losses were limited to 1 to 6 points. The most depressing influence was pressure from New Orleans operators.

Hedging sales were light, which brokers said was due primarily to Southern reports of good demand for lint from both domestic and foreign spinners, plus the apparent determination of many farmers to hold out for higher prices.

News from Worth street textile market was none too encouraging. Turnover was slow and prices showed some signs of weakening. Print cloths sold at ⅛ cent a yard under peak levels reached last week.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Charles H. Goren, leader of a Philadelphia group, is also the Nation's ranking player of the year. Today's hand shows him in action winning a contract of seven no-trump through a Vienna Coup squeeze, although two kings are held over his ace-queens. Here is the way he describes the play:

"East felt that one of his kings should be behind an ace, and therefore should take the trick. He was very much chagrined to learn that while both his kings were behind the aces, neither one could make.

"East opens with the ten of diamonds. Declarer, on looking at dummy, knows immediately that East holds both kings for his double. Finessing, therefore, is eliminated.

"The play requires careful management so as not to be caught in the wrong hand. The four diamonds are cashed. South discarding a heart. The ace of spades must now be cashed, the ace of clubs led and the jack must be overtaken and the club suit will be:

Chapter 10

LIKE ANY other competent professional, he vastly enjoyed a chance to show off the skill that did not betray how many years of fumbling mistakes had gone to build it up, and basked complacently in the obvious impression he had made on the inexperienced beginner before him. But the conscience of a sound technician smote him when the young teacher, getting up to go, said mournfully, "Goodness, how dumb I am! Why didn't I think of that?"

His bravura passage would be but a cheap showing-off, if all he had done was to shake her confidence in herself. The role of Mentor was a shabby one. As Aunt Lavinia often told him, he had been brought up to know better. "Listen to me, Susan," he said seriously and sincerely. "You are ten times smarter than most, to have thought about it at all."

As he spoke he saw with sudden distinctness that the gray iris of her eyes were ringed with a cleanly drawn line of black, and that she had a lovely mouth, firm, tender . . .

She was turning to go, but at a change in his face, stopped and waited. "Did you . . . was there something else, Mr. Hulme?"

His confusion was such that he looked away from her in a panic and decided hastily that this was no time to speak of anything personal. It would be crazy to bring that up now. "No, no . . ." he said, waving her on. "I . . . I . . . something just occurred to me that I . . ." He drew out his watch, looked blindly at it, and pulling a pad toward him, began to scribble as if jotting down a memorandum. It was to the accompaniment of derisive shrieks of laughter from the inner imp of self-mockery.

That night, as he sat in his study correcting English papers, Sibelius loudly shaping chaos into rugged form in Aunt Lavinia's room below him, his mind, cold and dignified, informed him with more force than respectfulness that this waiting for precisely the right occasion was nonsense. He laid down the paper in his hand, and resolutely set himself to think of a time at once, tomorrow, to get this small matter over with. The moment he thought of it, he knew of course that it would be easiest to make an occasion in her classroom at the primary school. The regular routine of his supervising took him there once in so often. He would time himself to arrive near the end of the afternoon session, and stay on after the children had gone. He often waited thus in a classroom after hours to talk over teaching methods, and everybody knew how he wore the third grade teachers out with his peculiar ideas about reading.

Yes, that would be a suitable time. He took up the English theme he was marking and with a steady hand crossed out for the ten thousandth time of his life, "And so" at the beginning of a paragraph.

Yet when the next afternoon he stood beside the teacher's desk on its low platform, his mouth was unexpectedly dry as he said, "I feel a little tired, Miss Barney, after my round of visits. I believe, if I won't be in your way, I'll just sit here for a moment after you have dismissed the class. And get my breath."

He sat down, annoyed to feel uneasy, and began the systematic relaxation of his muscles, one by one, which he used to help him through the tensity of the few moments before he rose to speak from a platform. The little boys and girls stamping past him, drab in their useful, comfortable, unlovely country clothes, looked down at the floor, glancing shyly sidewise at the superintendent, tall as a giant in their midget world. In her cheerful pink cotton dress teacher stood by the door. To her face, smilingly bent on them, they raised eyes of adoration, thankful for the reassurance of her familiar presence.

THE RIVULET of childhood made its way out of the door and flowed into the brook babbling down the hall toward outdoor freedom. The slim young teacher closed the door, shutting out the tramp, tramp of the marching children. She stood an instant, rubbing her eyes and flung up her arms in a long stretch. She too was evidently ready to sit down and get her breath. She looked tired. On her forefinger was a smudge of ink, a dusting of chalk laid a blurred white line across her smooth cheek. She dropped into the chair back of her desk, leaning her head on one hand, pushing her cloudlike hair back with the other. She looked tired, yes, but invincibly young.

Alarmingly young to the man who sat waiting for his voice to come under his control and who knew well how fatigue added years to his own aspect. He had been mad to consider laying in such callow untried hands the potential dynamite he had brought with him. As if he were thinking of it for the first time, he was again not sure what was best to do, what was safe to do. So because he was an experienced man and not the high-strung boy he had been, he did not rush into his speech. He waited. He waited for the dryness in his mouth to pass, for a small tremor in a deep-lying nerve to subside.

It was a quiet place to wait. He had said he was tired. The room and the girl expected nothing of him. The young teacher was taking him at his word, and abandoning herself also to slow letting down after tension. Her chin propped on one hand, her shoulders drooping, she stared vaguely at the golden squares laid on the floor by the October sunshine streaming through the dusty windows. The room like the two people in it seemed slowly to empty itself of movement and noise, slowly to fill up with silence. The shouts of the children, dispersing outside, mad with joy over their restoration to life, were at first so loud that the windows rattled in their frames. But the clattering little feet soon scampered down the hill. The exultant screaming dimmed, died away to echoes, to nothingness.

The silence and the softly dusty sunlight lay like an amber pool around the feet of the man waiting to feel more sure of himself. It brimmed up around him, dissolving away his uneasiness. He stretched out his legs, always too long save in deep armchairs, tipped back, leaned his head against the wall. The young teacher gave a small yawn, and looked apologetically at the visitor to see if he had noticed it. Absurd that this should give him the reassurance that he needed. Without bringing the front legs of his chair to the floor, his head still tipped back against the wall, he heard his voice, easy, natural, unhurried, unemphatic, just as he would have had it, begin to explain to Susan Barney his real reason for what had looked to her like kindness to old Mrs. Washburn.

It did not take him long. Yet long enough to banish all the dreaming blankness from the girl's face. She sat up, she laid both hands flat on her desk, she leaned forward a little as if not to lose a single one of the astonishing words.

"Well, it's done. Ruat coelum," thought Mr. Hulme, coming to the end.

She did not know it was the end. After he had finished, she sat on, looking expectantly at him out of gray eyes so widely opened that he could see almost the whole of the black ring drawn around the clear gray iris.

Well, what was she going to make of it?

She said nothing at first. When she finally perceived that he had finished, she exclaimed, "I never heard anything so interesting in all my life."

He dropped the front legs of his chair to the floor with a click. "Interesting?"

"Why, you could do that to anybody!" she said eagerly, and leaning forward asked, "Did you ever do it for anybody but Mrs. Washburn?"

"Oh, Lord, yes!" The dangerous confession came without his knowing it.

She sprang up, stepped around the table, sat down near his chair on the edge of the low platform, doubling up flexibly like a child, and asked in a low confidential tone, "Did you ever figure Miss Peck out that way?"

MORE DISCONCERTED than ever by the unexpectedness of her reaction and by the speed with which its current was snatching him off in a direction he had not dreamed of taking, he made a small effort at caution, and before he replied, tried to foresee where his answer would land him. It would be safe to tell the truth, wouldn't it? The answer to that particular question involved nothing malicious. And he now remembered that Miss Peck, looming large in the girl's life just now, probably was the blankest of enigmas to her. The two women might have a more comfortable time together this winter if he gave the younger one a clue to the riddle. As he allowed himself this moment of hesitation, she explained, "I don't mean I don't like Miss Peck. Everybody said she'd be hard to get along with. But I don't think she is. She's really awfully nice. But—queer!"

His eye caught an arithmetic problem left on the blackboard. "Five rolls, narrow width," he read off, pointing to it. "Those words don't make sense, do they, unless you know the first part that it's the sum of and the answer to: 'to paper a room 10 feet by 14½, with three windows . . .' and all the rest of it?"

His metaphor was clear to her. "Well, do you know the first part—about Miss Peck? What's she the sum of?"

"When I came to Clifford twenty-two years ago," he began in the tone of leisurely narrative he used sometimes in telling a story to the students who came to the house Sunday afternoons, "Miss Peck was living with her father. Her mother had died when she was a little girl. You've perhaps heard older Clifford people talk about Lawyer Peck, and what a bright man he was?"

She nodded.

"Well, he wasn't so bright as all that, not by a long shot, and he was an old devil. One of the kind who can't find anything to enjoy but making other people look foolish. A good many people here thought he was clever because he was malicious. Razor-tongued men who have caught on to the trick of making anything seem silly usually are thought extra smart by people who aren't so very bright themselves. That's queer, isn't it, but you must have noticed it. To see him knock down with his fists somebody feeble who couldn't fight back—nobody would have thought that showed he was strong. But to cut a helpless person to pieces with sneers—that's always considered a sign of brains." He perceived that he was off on a special hobby of his own and returned to his subject. "Well, clever or not, Lawyer Peck had had a chance to begin making his daughter look ridiculous while she was still a little girl with nobody to stand up for her. With that long start he had easily kept the whip hand. When I first saw her she was"—he looked appraisingly at the girl before him as if guessing her age, although from his academy records he knew it accurately—"only about six or seven years older than you."

As he had expected, this astonished his listener to the point of incredulity. "What did she look like?" she asked.

"She was handsome in a massive sort of way. That is, she would have been . . . But she had certainly been shut up in a dark room with the door locked. She looked like, well, like a Roman empress, or a bas-relief on a Babylonian tomb, or something grand, and she acted like a dumb little girl that's just been scolded — dropping things, doing everything wrong, twisting her fingers . . . She'd hang her head if anybody looked at her. And whenever her father spoke to her, her hands began to shake and she got so rattled she could hardly answer him. Honestly, I took her to be subnormal mentally."

"But I can't imagine Miss Peck being timid!" cried the girl. She's so big."

"Ah, that was one reason she was. Haven't you ever noticed that extra tall women are nearly always apologetic for existing? That's one of the sweet results of our sweet tradition that women are objectionable if they're not inferior to men."

THE GIRL, not very tall herself, showed no interest in this theory. She looked blank, waited a moment, and tried to get on with the story. "But what happened?"

"Well, old Lawyer Peck did the one kind thing of his life. He died before he had quite wrung his daughter's neck, and he left her no money, not a penny. Only the house. She began to take in boarders. She had to do something. It was a terrible come-down for Lawyer Peck's daughter, people said. That was all they knew about it. It was the saving of her. She found she could cook, and she's cooked her way back to life. For she's alive now, all right. The wounds her father gave her have healed over. Lots of scars left, of course. What everybody calls her queer ways are the scars, I should think, wouldn't you? That bulletin board, for instance. The way I figure that out is that as she began to get over the slashings from her father's knife, she began to have ideas like everybody else. But she didn't dare try to express them because of her father's always making fun of whatever she said. That wound probably went too deep to heal over entirely. She probably can't speak out the way you and I can—just can't make her voice do it. The bulletin board is perhaps—shouldn't you think?—her voice."

He was silent.

Murmuring low as if not to break the thread, the girl said, "I feel as though I'd never seen Miss Peck before," and waited for him to go on. But his story was told. He had only a comment to add, "Do you know, I've come to think that Miss Peck is one of the most intelligent people in town? Probably always was. You just notice, this winter you spend in her house—when she does say something it's never flat. Sometimes it's disagreeable. She sees through people's pretenses as sharply as her father ever did. Lots of things she puts on her bulletin board are queer as the dickens, but some of them are worth remembering."

The girl's wide eyes gazed dreamily through him at the newly discovered Miss Peck. "It sort of takes my breath away!" she said in an undertone.

A change came into her face. The purity of its impersonal attentiveness was colored by an expression he had always particularly disliked and which long ago in his youth he had scornfully labeled the "what-can-I-get-out-of-this-for-myself look." "I wish—I do wish . . ." she began, gazing at him with a considering eye.

He thought cynically, "Now she's going to try to get me to talk about her!"

Funeral Held For Maj. Stark, Air-Crash Victim

Funeral services for Maj. Howard C. Stark, of Alexandria, Commerce Department inspector and pioneer in the development of blind flying, who died nearly four years ago when his plane crashed in the Utah mountains, were held at 1 p. m. yesterday at Fort Meyer Chapel in Arlington. Maj. Stark's body was discovered by a sheepherder and identified by a United States marshal of Huntsville, Utah, September 20.

A native of Pawling, N. Y., Stark developed much of the science of instrument flying. He worked with Eastern Airlines, the Royal Dutch Airlines and pioneered in South America air routes. In 1935 he was employed by the Bureau of Air Commerce, now part of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. He died when his plane was forced down in a snowstorm January 16, 1936, while flying between Rock Springs, Wyo., and Salt Lake City, Utah.
